In Memoriam.

Oh, my little baby, once so bright and fair,
Now in yonder churchyard she doth lie;
How my heart is aching since they laid her there,
Though I know I'll meet her bye and bye.
By an empty cradle now I sit and weep
Where I laid her down to breathe her last;
How I watched the smile that played upon her lips
When they told me Death was coming fast.
Then I knelt beside her, kissed her dimpled face,
As the Angel entered in the door;
Oh! I fain would hide her from his cold embrace,
But I know she is happy evermore.
Death, thou hast bereft me of my tender care,
And my tears are falling free and fast;
There is nothing left me but a lock of hair,
Now that she is numbered with the past.

Little did I think that I would lose my dear,
With her smiling face and eyes so blue.
How my heart doth sink with sorrow and despair,
For, alas! I know not what to do.
Death stole in so softly to my little girl
Ere I scarce had time to be aware;
Took away my jewel, took away my pearl,
Took away my treasure and my care.

Oh, those tiny fingers, and those laughing eyes,
I shall never see while here below;
Now the grass is springing where my darling lies,
O'er that tender bosom white as snow.
How I loved my baby words can never tell,
Though she is gone to Him who loves her more;
And with heart nigh breaking I must say farewell
Till we meet again on yonder shore.

THE PIRATE.

By Sir Walter Scott.

CHAPTER XII.

"This, I believe, is your sister," continued Magnus, after a short pause. "Miss Barbara Yellowley, permit me the honor of a neighborly salute,—and so saying, with a daring and self-devoted courtesy, which would find no equal in our degenerate days, he actually ventured to salute the withered cheek of the spinster who relaxed so much of her usual peevishness of expression, as to receive the courtesy with something which approached a smile. Hethen looked full at Mordaunt Merton, and, without offering his hand, said in a tone somewhat broken by suppressed agitation, "You too are welcome, Master Mordaunt."

"Did I not feel so," said Mordaunt, naturally offended by the coldness of his host's manner, "I had not been here—and it is not yet time to turn back."

"Young man," replied Magnus, "you know better than most, that from these doors no man can turn, without an offence to their owner. I pray you, disturb not my guests by your ill-timed scruples. When Magnus Troil says welcome, all are welcome who are within hearing of his voice, and it is an indifferent loud one. Walk on, my worthy guests, and let us see what cheer my lasses can make you within doors."

So saying, and taking care to make his manner so general to the whole party, that Mordaunt should not be able to appropriate any particular portion of the welcome to himself, nor yet to complain of being excluded from all share in it, the Udaller ushered the guests into his house, where two large outer rooms, which on the present occasion, served the purpose of a modern saloon, were already crowded with guests of every description.

The furniture was sufficiently simple, and had a character peculiar to the situation of these stormy islands. Magnus Troil was, indeed, like most of the higher class of Zetland proprietors, a friend to the distressed traveller, whether by sea or land, and had repeatedly exerted his whole authority in protecting the property and persons of shipwrecked mariners; yet so frequent were wrecks upon that tremendous coast, and so many unappropriated articles were constantly flung ashore, that the interior of the house bore sufficient witness to the ravages of the ocean, and to the exercise of those rights which the lawyers term droit de seigneurie. The chairs, which are used in cabins, and many of them were of foreign construction; the mirrors and cabinets, which were placed against the walls for ornament or convenience, had, it was plain from their form, been constructed for ship-board, and one, or two of the latter were of strange and unknown wood. Even the partition which separated the two apartments, seemed constructed out of the bulk-heads of some large vessel, clumsily adapted to the service which it at present performed, by the hand of some native joiner. To a stranger, these evident marks and tokens of human misery might, at the first glance, form a contrast with the scene of mirth which they were now associated; but the association was so familiar to the natives, that it did not for a moment interrupt the course of their glee.

To the younger part of these revellers the presence of Mordaunt was like a fresh charm of enjoyment. All came around him to marvel at his absence, and all, by their repeated inquiries, plainly showed that they conceived it had been entirely voluntary on his side. The youth felt that this general acceptance relieved his anxiety on one painful point. Whatever prejudice the family of Burgh-Westra might have adopted respecting him, it must be of a private nature; and at least he had not the additional pain of finding that he was depreciated in the eyes of society at large; and his vindication, when he found opportunity to make one, would not require to be extended beyond the circle of a single family. This was consoling; though his heart still throbbled with anxiety at the thought of meeting with his estranged, but still beloved friends. Laying the excuse of his absence on his father's state of health, he made his way through the various groups of friends and guests, each of whom seemed willing to detain him as long as possible, and having, by presenting them to one or two families of consequence, got rid of his travelling companions, who at first stuck fast as bars, he reached at length the door of a small apartment, which, opening from one of the large exterior rooms we have mentioned, Minna and Brenda had been permitted to fit up after their own taste, and call their peculiar property.

Mordaunt had contributed no small share of the invention and mechanical execution employed in fitting up this favorite apartment, and in disposing its ornaments. It was, indeed, during his last residence at Burgh-Westra, as free to his entrance and occupation, as to its proper mistresses. But now, so much were times altered, that he remained with his finger on the latch, uncertain whether he should take the freedom to draw it, until Brenda's voice pronounced the words, "Come in, then," in the tone of one who is interrupted by an unwelcome disturber, who is to be heard and dispatched with all the speed possible.

At this signal Merton entered the fanciful cabinet of the sisters, which by the addition of many ornaments, including some articles of considerable value, had been fitted up for the approaching festival. The daughters of Magnus, at the moment of Mordaunt's entrance, were seated in deep consultation with the stranger Cleveland, and with a little slight-made old man, whose eye retained the vivacity of spirit, which had supported him under the thousand vicissitudes of a changeful and precarious life, and which, accompanying him in his old age, rendered his gray hairs less awfully reverend, perhaps, but not less beloved, than would a more grave and less imaginative expression of contentance and character. There was even a penetrating shrewdness mingled in the look of curiosity, with which, as he stepped for an instant aside, he seemed to watch the meeting of Mordaunt with the two lovely sisters.

The reception the youth met with resembled, in general character, that which he had experienced from Magnus himself; but the maidens could not so well cover their sense of the change of circumstances under which they met. Both blushed, as, rising, and without extending the hand, far less offering the cheek, as the fashion of the times permitted, and almost exacted, they paid to Mordaunt the salutation due to an ordinary acquaintance. But the blush of the older was one of those transient evidences of fitting emotion, that vanishes as fast as the passing thought which excites them. In an instant she stood before the youth calm and cold, returning, with guarded and cautious courtesy, the usual civilities, which, with a faltering voice, Mordaunt endeavored to present to her. The emotion of Brenda bore, externally at least, a deeper and more agitating character. Her blush extended over every part of her beautiful skin which her dress permitted to be visible, including her slender neck, and the upper region of a finely formed bosom. Neither did she even attempt to reply to what share of his confused compliment Mordaunt addressed to her in particular, but regarded him with eyes in which displeasure was evidently mingled with feelings of regret, and recollections of former times. Mordaunt felt, as it were, assured upon the instant, that the renard of Minna was extinguished, but that it might be yet possible to recover that of the milder Brenda; and such is the waywardness of human fancy, that though he had never hitherto made any distinct difference betwixt these two beautiful and interesting girls, the favor of her, which seemed most absolutely withdrawn, became at the moment the most interesting in his eyes.

A Three Million Dollar Lawsuit.

Charles G. Franklyn, w.o. has for years been very well known in New York social and business circles, and was until five or six years ago the African agent of the Cunard Steamship Line, was a few nights ago, lodged in Ludlow street jail, in default of $500,000 bail. The Sun says that the suit in which Franklyn was arrested is brought by Sir Bache Cunard to recover $3,000,000, alleged to have been converted to his own use by Franklyn. Cunard is Franklyn's cousin, and the latter was formerly manager of the Cunard line. The allegation is that Franklyn misappropriated part of the money as president of the Horn Silver Mining Company, in which Cunard had invested heavily. The stockholders have for over a year been trying to force Franklyn to explain an item of $640,667 on the books which is entered as "accounts due company." It is supposed that this amount represents a loan by Franklyn as president to himself as an individual, but no explanation has ever been obtained. The mystery attending the finances of the company has nearly ruined its stock. Meanwhile, Franklyn's credit has been lost and though reputed a wealthy man he has been paying enormous rates of interest for call loans, sometimes as high as $5000 for the use of $25,000 for 30 days. He is likely to remain in Ludlow street jail for some time, as he is tried in vain last week for several hours among his wealthy former friends to raise the $100,000 necessary to release him upon $500,000 bail as fixed by the Court. When Franklyn retired from the agency of the Cunard Line, he was supposed to be worth $2,000,000. With Frank G. Brown he went into the Horn Silver Mine Company, which at first paid large dividends, and it is understood that it was through his representations that the money of the Cunards was put into the company. It was at the cottage of Franklyn, at Elberon, that President Garfield died.
