How Can I... By Anne Ashley

Q. How can I store white garments and keep them from turning yellow?

Q. How can I prevent the juice from running out of fruit pies?
A. The juice will not run out if edges of bottom crust are wet before adding top crust, and the edges are pressed firmly together.

A. Wash them regularly with a soft cloth or mop wrung out of warm ammonia water.

That Body Of Yours By James W. Barton, M.D.

THE GREAT CONTRIBUTION TO HEALTH AND HAPPINESS BY AMERICAN HEART ASSOCIATION
A few years ago, Dr. Charles Mayo made the statement that a physician who did not take his patient into his confidence, explaining the patient's exact condition and how he could help himself, was not an up-to-date physician. This idea of giving the patient, the patient's family, and the public generally all the information available about his ailment is becoming widespread. All over the world there are new voluntary groups of laymen giving time and money to help investigate the cause of various ailments and handicaps and so help these afflicted individuals to obtain a larger measure of health and happiness.

While we all know about the voluntary societies helping the blind, the hard of hearing, rheumatics and arthritics, we perhaps do not know how much can be and is being done for the despairing victims of heart disease.

In the annual report of the American Heart Association, Dr. Louis N. Katz, president, states that an unmistakable vote of confidence has been cast by the American public through ever-increasing demands for the services of the Association, its growing participation in community heart programs and its rising contributions to finance its vital work.

By bringing the lay public into partnership with the medical profession in the fight against heart disease, these physicians laid the foundation for a vigorous program to salvage human beings, prevent premature deaths and needless suffering and disability.

By encouraging research on heart disease even to the extent of appointing full-time medical research workers, the Association is publishing accurate information to the general public that replaces anxiety with knowledge. The public thus becomes aware that heart disease is not hopeless, and that constructive action for better personal and community health is possible.

According to the report, there are 56 direct affiliates (branches) of the American Heart Association with approximately 325 chapters under their supervision or jurisdiction. We have but to look back less than five years, when heart disease meant invalidism and death in our minds, to realize how this service of the American Heart Association and its many chapters has replaced fear with knowledge and salvaged human beings.

The Stars Say -- By Genevieve Kemble

For Tomorrow
THIS may prove to be a dramatic and exciting week end, with much concentration on festivities and functions in honor of romantic, social, domestic and artistic accomplishments. There may be particularly thrilling episodes because of the sudden advent of unplanned events. The joy of the unpredictable may heighten the occasion. It is probable that the old saw "let joy be unconfined" will hold true under a benign incitement of a "Midsummer Night's Dream."

For the Birthday
Those whose birthday it is aided and abetted by the "Stars in their courses" to seek their most cherished and worthy hopes, wishes and aspirations under the incitement, encouragement and creative drive for expression. In fulfillment under the impetus of "the major benefic" among the celestial planets Jupiter. These urges, aspirations and abilities are singularly enhanced and fortified by the mighty powers of an unprecedented and unpredictable Uranus, under whose way the aphorism "expect the unexpected" is bound to materialize surprising results and breath-taking denouements.

A child born on this day is bound to rise to sudden heights of soul-filling recognition and rewards for special talents or conspicuous achievements.

Day After Tomorrow
THE horoscope holds highlights of the exceptional, unusual, thrilling and possibly spectacular in all affairs, realistic and conventional. Perhaps the emotional nature may be moved to some benign crisis through a romantic adventure or spiritual fervor. It is a day to maintain composure, to seek inner strength and guidance in spiritual contemplation rather than emotional raptures. Keep "feet on the ground though the head be in the clouds."

If It Is Your Birthday
Those whose birthday it is are confronted by a year of the bizarre, fantastic, unique and strange. The mentality and inner urges are under stress and tension of an inexplorable and quizzical drive. The novel, peculiar and singular may rise to strange heights of the elusive, the intangible, even amidst stern endeavors to keep practical, regular and trustworthy. Hold the ground in a moment of peculiar stress and storm, yielding to mercurial incitements as eccentricities may begot an unwelcome climax.

A child born on this day is likely to have a mercurial temperament, but with much creative talent, high ideals and aspirations. It may rise to exceptional dignities in church, state, in art, poetry or metaphysics.

PARIS, Aug. 21 (AP) — Bernard MacFadden's lawyer said here today that the city of Paris has given permission for the 84-year-old muscle man to make a parachute jump over the city. MacFadden celebrated his 83rd birthday last year by parachuting into the Hudson River near New York City.

ELLEN'S DIARY By An Island Farmer's Wife

This week saw, we believe, the beginning of autumn. It came for us in the sight of a binder moving amid the gold of ripened grain-field. And a widening vacancy about which to the initiated even at a distance indicates first sheaves fallen, the fact confirmed by the present appearance of stocks to march prettily about.

Though summer hot and ripening may still linger in the lap of it, we found Autumn too in fringes of potatoes brought in from the field; in harvest apples. And "it's strange," Jamie announced breaking a golden bean of those we were gathering, to savor its flavor—one morning in the garden-of-field—"how good things folks grow themselves taste! I don't know why this, but I'm sure I never tasted beans more juicy or sweet than these!"

On the farms, here and at Alderlea, where we fancy, the little wind of tonight will be keeping a bit lonely about the place, in this season between our haying and harvest, little leisure is being given to the farmers. "Time was" we overheard James reminisce the other evening to a visiting farmer, "when along about now a fellow could expect to take life easier. Oh, there'd be a bit of fencing to do, to move the stock to fresh pasture perhaps, or odds and ends of chores, not too laborious. But nowadays" he smiled ruefully, "a farmer has scarcely time to draw an extra breath! We're actually busier now than we were at the haying."

Some fire wood has been stored and yards of stone have been hauled by the trucks to make one substance of the new floors of barn. Both endeavours will contribute in goodly measure to the welfare and happiness of the Family at Alderlea. What bakings there will be with the maple fires! What meals hastened with the quick of the softwood!

And of what will we chat when cold evenings draw us closely about the glowing hearth? Of the lovely things of earth... of blessings and privileges and beauty. And of the not-so-good; those serpent-like evil items that rear ugly heads in English gardens. And of the sorrows, the tragic, pitiable happenings that without warning turn happy homes so suddenly into shadowed places of mourning. And perhaps, as Granddaughter asked of a recent sad bereavement, some one will query again: "Why do babies die? Why if they are soon to be taken, are they given? And we who see 'darkly' shall have no reply."

"If I could know the reason why. That small new babies have to die. Or understand the mighty power Behind one small unfolding flower. I too would know the meaning Of all this mystery of men.

And yet my faith is strong and deep. That he who would these secrets keep. Knows all our frailties, all our fears. The little happiness... the tears. And some day we shall come to know. The clear divinity of wee! Until Monday --- Diary --- Good-night..."

Soap Economy
The small scraps of soap should not be thrown away, but gathered together and placed in a soap shaker. This economy will save many bars of soap in the course of a year.

Tarnish
If brass or copper articles are tarnished, put some fine salt into a saucer. Dip into it a cut lemon. Rub on the metal. The acid will remove the stains.

Added Size
Light woodwork and light-colored draperies always tend to give a room the appearance of being larger than it really is.

DOROTHY DIX'S COLUMN-- Bad Temper It's A Real Detriment To Happy Marriage

DEAR MISS DIX: Bob and I have been going steady for two years, and I expect my engagement ring shortly. During the two years I have been true and faithful to him. Recently I learned that he had taken two girls out during this time. Needless to say, my heart was broken. He admitted it was true and promised that he would never happen again. He reminded me that on both occasions we had had a quarrel and I told him never to come back. He is right about the arguments, and I do admit I have a terrible temper. I forgave Bob for his two lapses, and have promised to try to conquer my temper. Do you think we can have a successful marriage?
ALICIA

Muriel Nissen

ANSWER: You and Bob seem to be a little confused as to who forgives whom. Since, on the two occasions when he went out with other girls, you began the quarrel, turned him out of the house and refused to see him for some time, I would assume that he was in a better position to dispense forgiveness than you were.

Actually, you have two terrific faults to overcome. A hasty temper is a human weakness and an honest effort to overcome it would be commendable. However, if you make a habit of forcing it upon others to take the blame for your own shortcomings, that is a flaw in your character which needs considerable repair work. If Bob is going to continue to permit you to forgive him for your own faults, he'll make a very soggy doormat of a husband.

REAL RESOLVE NEEDED
A promise to try to control your temper isn't much in the way of reformation. You need a definite determination to conquer a fiery temper and a very bad disposition. You must also learn to accept the responsibility for your own shortcomings and not fold the blame for them on innocent bystanders. Bob was completely right to go out with other girls when you had broken off with him, and it seems to me, he was a little too docile in coming back on your terms. Bob's backbone needs a little reinforcing.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: Though my mother doesn't approve of my going out with boys, since I'm only 14, she did make an exception recently and allowed me to go on a blind date with my girl friend and two boys. The boy I went with came from another state, a considerable distance away. I liked him very much and hate the thought of not seeing him again.
B. D.

ANSWER: Since the boy does live such a great distance away, you realize perfectly that the chances of seeing him again are small. However, since he did manage to make one trip to your city, he might make another. Naturally, since he was your first date, he has made a big impression on you, but there will be other boys just as nice.

DEAR MISS DIX: The boy I go with has a very irritating habit of doing things to tease me. He gets very annoyed if I act in the same fashion with him, however. I know he loves me, but his actions are very upsetting.
BLANCHE G.

ANSWER: Men who have this teasing habit rarely overcome it. To them it's a smart trick, and the more they hurt others, the more enjoyment they have themselves. A man who carries it to the extent that your friend does will never make you happy. Perhaps a good dose of his own medicine will help. Break off with him, go out with other boys and see if he can take the treatment he likes to give.

DEAR MISS DIX: I go with a boy who is very well mannered when with me, but my chums say that he speaks very slightly of me to them. He is 19, I am 17.
JO-ANN

ANSWER: In any case of this kind, I would distrust the chums rather than the boy. If he felt inclined to disparage you to others, he wouldn't bother going with you at all. Jealous or vindictive chums can cause a lot of trouble. Be wary of them.
