at St. Dunstan's University, gave a lecture on sacred arts at the Confederation Centre last night. His lecture was based on the two great traditions of sacred arts in European history—the Zantine tradition of Eastern churches and western traditions.

The Zantine tradition includes churches in Greece, Slav countries, Turkey and Russia from the fifth to the 15th century. The western traditions included the Romanesque, 11th and 12th centuries, and Gothic periods, 13th and 14th centuries.

Father Arsenault described the Mosaics and Icons, given by Greece, Slav countries, Turkey and Russia from the fifth to the 15th centuries as magnificent sacred art, very stylized, semi-abstract and an art meant for public liturgy and glorification of gods.

POINTS OUT TRADITIONS
In Father Arsenault's lecture he pointed out that it was the western tradition from the ninth to the 14th centuries that produced the great abbeys, the magnificent gothic cathedrals of western Europe—Stauis, stained glass and illuminated manuscripts were given as examples of this period.

"With the Renaissance, a return to the classical and naturalistic style of Greece and Rome, religious art tends to lose its sacred character as it becomes more and more naturalistic," said Father Arsenault. "Even the religious quality disappears, only the subject (content) matter remains religious but the feeling is secular," he continued.

He described the 18th and 19th centuries as centuries that produced no sacred art and not even any good religious art. He described the modern age as an age which is returning to formalism and abstraction, a withdrawing from naturalism, and said that there is a great hope again for a rebirth of an art truly sacred.

Fishermen's Ass'n Reports Record Year

The United Maritime Fishermen's Association, a regional marketing co-operative serving the four Atlantic provinces and the Magdalen Islands, experienced another record year with sales exceeding $7,770,000 — an increase of $230,000 over 1964.

Guest speaker at the annual banquet held Tuesday night in Amherst, N.S., attended by over 150 persons including visitors and delegates, was Dr. A. F. Laidlaw, national secretary of the co-operative union of Canada, Ottawa, who spoke on the future of United Maritime Fishermen's Limited.

In his report, Dr. Laidlaw reviewed the year's activity and announced the resignation of S. J. Campbell, general manager, who because of health and the added responsibilities he was called upon to shoulder as a result of a proposed expansion program, gave up his position after serving the organization for 20 years.

APPROVE PROPOSAL
Highlight of the convention was the approval of a proposal to change the structure of the United Maritime Fishermen's Association from a federated organization with independent boards to a centralized structure with locals owned and controlled by the central board.

The transition may take a few years before completion but new developments in the co-operative fishermen's program will be directed and owned by the central United Maritime Fishermen's Association.

Souris Town Council Deals With Matters

SOURIS — A wide variety of topics were discussed by the Souris town council Tuesday, Feb. 15. All councillors except Mr. Solomon were present.

The council reviewed two tenders with one discussion being adjourned to the next meeting of the council. The town clerk, Mrs. Gene Roach, was instructed to recall tenders for the supply of all sizes several which were received quoted identical amounts. Tenders for this supply will close Feb. 25 at 12 noon. Tenders for insurance were held for the next meeting.

Present at the meeting were Alan MacLean and Harvey Poole who requested councillors consideration of tax concessions for the eastern Kings Arena Association. Their main interest was promoting facilities for the youth of this area.

The clerk was requested to write to local potato dealers asking co-operation from their trucks to dump refuse on the dump itself instead of on the road leading up to it. Complaints were received because other citizens were unable to use the facilities at such times.

SDU Obtains Rare Book

The Rare Book Collection at St. Dunstan's has had another addition made to it recently. It obtained a facsimile reproduction of the Ellesmere Chaucer (Manchester: University Press, 1911).

The acquisition of the rare edition came about through the initiative of Cyril Byrne, a former professor at SDU, who is engaged in post-graduate studies at Oxford University at the present time.

This very limited edition of The Ellesmere Chaucer was published at the beginning of the present century through the cooperation of the Earl of Ellesmere and Manchester University Scholars prevailed upon the Ellesmere family to permit facsimile reproduction of the original manuscript as a service to the field of literature. The original Manuscripts of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales are now in the Duke Humphrey Room of the Bodleian Library at Oxford.

Rink Meet Goes Tonight

SOURIS — A meeting to consider the possibility of establishing an artificial ice plant in the Souris Arena will be held tonight in the Souris Regional High School at 8 o'clock.

Natural ice in the arena this year was poor due to mild weather conditions which slowed many minor hockey activities and other activity in the rink.

With the establishment of an artificial plant, the rink will be able to conduct its regular winter schedule without fear of mild weather melting the ice.

SDU Debaters Gain Unanimous Decision

The St. Dunstan's University Debating Society won a unanimous decision over King's College of Halifax last night at the SDU auditorium before a crowd estimated at 400 persons.

Representing St. Dunstan's and holding the negative side of the topic were Tom McMillan and Phil MacDonald, both Junior Arts students in their second year with the society. Mr. Enman and B. Jones held the negative for King's College.

The topic of last night's debate was resolved that French Canadian nationalism would lead to the disintegration of Canada.

Judges for the debate were Charles Campbell, Morell, Frank Sigworth, and Francis Blanchard, both of Charlottetown. In their remarks after the debate, the judges stated that St. Dunstan's won the debate on the strength of their stronger arguments, clearer presentation and superior documentation.

They said that the King's debaters had trouble with enunciation, and failed to be convincing as well as convince the audience of their arguments.

THIRD VICTORY
This was the third victory for St. Dunstan's in the A.I.D.L. in their three scheduled debates. Because the results are not final in other debates, the exact position of St. Dunstan's is not known. At present; UNB, St. Thomas, Kings, and Memorial have been defeated. Mount Allison is not in the league this year. Thus St. Francis, Acadia and Dal remain in contention, but with three unanimous decisions, St. Dunstan's is assured of at least a chance in the playoffs, if not first place.
