Murder In Duplicate

The fat man was watching him. The black automatic was now steady in his grip. Corder said smugly: "The police should be here at any moment now. You heard me tell them to hurry. My evening will not, after all, be entirely devoid of amusement. I shall have great pleasure in handing you both over." His little bulging eyes swivelled towards Mary, and his thin voice rose. "As for you, my dear, I told you, didn't I, that I'd live to see you hanged—"

Jim's fingers closed on the back of the chair. He had been resting his elbows on it, but now stood upright. He lifted the chair and hurled it at Corder. In the same movement he ducked and pushed Mary to one side.

The chair skimmed across the desk top and hit Corder full in the face. The fat man went over backwards, taking his own chair with him in his fall. The hand holding the automatic flew upwards, and his fingers closed convulsively on the trigger. The shot smashed through the mouldering plaster of the ceiling, narrowly missing the light globe. With a demonic scream, the Siamese cat leaped from Corder's shoulder and fled into a corner of the room, where it stood, at bay, its back arched. It spat at them its enormous eyes gleaming with hate.

Jim vaulted over the desk. He stooped and wrenched the gun from Corder's hand. Then he stepped back.

"You can get up now," he said. Corder lay on the floor, amid the debris of the two smashed chairs. His face was purple as he heaved and gasped, trying unsuccessfully to raise himself. His bulk was too much for him.

"I — can't get up," he gasped. "You'll have to help me."

"Then you'll have to lie where you are, until the police come," said Jim cheerfully. "I hope you won't be too uncomfortable." He paused. "Thanks for an interesting evening." He moved towards the door, keeping an eye on Corder, who struggled feebly on the floor and then lay still, panting for breath. "Come on, Mary." They went out of the room.

Presentation To Charlottetown Soldier

Best candidate of his platoon graduating at Charlottetown, P.E.I., receives a wrist watch being the 25th Canadian Infantry Brigade Junior NCO's presented by Brig. A. J. M. MacDonald, British School in Korea, Lt. Cpl. C. E. Taylor, RCE, of Army.—(National Defence Photo).

while Corder watched them helplessly, with eyes that matched his cat's.

Jim put the black automatic in to his pocket. It made an uncomfortable bulge, but it might come in very useful.

"Poisonous creature!" he exclaimed. "If looks could kill, we'd be dead."

"More venom than a cobra," Mary agreed. Her voice was firm. "I didn't know you could throw chairs like that."

"I improve with practice," Jim said. I only used my fists on Hamilton." He frowned. "I can't believe that Hamilton got the police so quickly. He had no authority to enter your flat in the first place. He'd have a lot of explaining to do."

"Well, someone told the police," said Mary. She hesitated. "It isn't worth it, Jim. Is it? They're bound to catch us sooner or later. Don't you think I ought to go to the nearest police station, and give myself up? After all, there's really nothing else to do. You thought Corder was the murderer, and so did I for a while. Now I don't, somehow. He told us all that stuff about having strychnine. The real murderer wouldn't have done that. Corder was just playing with us — because he knew he could prove that he had nothing to do with the murder. That's why he was so confident. Did you see his face, when he got that phone call, and understood what it meant? He thought — we were the murderers. He was terrified out of his wits." She sighed. "Take me to a police station, Jim, and let's get it over."

"That's no way to talk!" Jim tried to speak confidently. "We've started this thing, and we've got to go on. What's more, we've learned a lot."

"My dear, you've got to think of yourself."

For answer, Jim kissed her. Then he seized hold of her hand. "Come on. Let's get out of here, before Corder starts yelling blue murder. He might even manage to get to his feet without the help of a steam crane. If the police are really on their way, we don't want to be here when they arrive."

When they reached the gate at the end of the hedge-lined path, the roadway was still silent and deserted. Jim's car stood at the kerb as he had left it, the lights out.

He opened the door, and said briskly: "Get inside. I'm not quite sure where we're going, but —"

His voice died away. "What's the matter?" he said sharply.

Mary was staring into the back seat of the car. Jim leaned over and switched on the inside light.

In the back seat of the car, the man with the scarred temple and the broken nose, who called himself Hamilton, lay slumped. He had been shot through the head at close range.

Guider Arriving To Train Leaders Here

Miss Shirley Cameron, a blue cord diploma'd guider, is arriving today from Toronto to spend a month in P. E. I.

Miss Cameron will conduct training for guiders throughout the province during October. She has already conducted similar training courses in New Brunswick, which proved to be most successful, and it is felt that her visit will be of great value in encouraging interest and promoting higher standards in guiding in P. E. I.

Miss Cameron will spend a week in Summerside and surrounding districts, and will come to Charlottetown next weekend.

KIDNEY ACIDS Rob your Rest..

Many people never seem to get a good night's rest. They toss and turn—blame it on "nerves"—when it may be their kidneys. Healthy kidneys filter poisons and excess acids from the blood. If they fail and impurities stay in the system—disturbed rest often follows. If you don't rest well get and use Dodd's Kidney Pills. Dodd's help the kidneys so that you can rest better—and feel better.
