Professor Foster's Address.

The address given last night by Prof. Foster on the subject of temperance was one which those who heard it will not soon forget.

We think that the closing appeal to support the Scott Act when backed by sufficient legislative machinery, will decide many waverers in that direction.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—On reading your remarks on my letter of yesterday, I was led to suppose that I had unintentionally reflected on the Dominion Government.

Acting on the report of the Inspector, the Department of Marine could not possibly have adopted any other course than the one pursued; but that there is blame to be borne by some one is abundantly evident.

The case put concisely stands thus:—During the month of October, the Company's boats are running, and doing excellent work.

Yet, on the 1st of November, when the trade of the Province is at its height, the Company are ordered to discontinue running their boats, and others much less efficient are put on.

That our commerce is to be at the mercy of an inspector who may be actuated by a "malignant influence" as you put it, or by self interest or mere caprice—is simply preposterous.

I find, upon enquiry, that the boats could not be put on again this fall, even if permission were obtained to run them, therefore a public meeting could not avail; still I think an investigation is required.

It remains for our representatives to ventilate this matter by instituting a Parliamentary enquiry into the conduct of the Inspector, which doubtless will show that the Government performed an unavoidable duty; had they pursued any other course they would have converted an act of Parliament into a farce.

Yours, etc., J. T. JENKINS.
