ELLEN'S DIARY
Education Is Not Lost By Marriage, But Enriched

Travelling condiions about, were hazardous today, due to the icy surfaces left here and there in the wake of the January thaw. Folks on foot must watch their steps. The cow-kind must be content to drink indoors. Machines found precarious wheeling. They labored to get away. Some mounted the incline of road which leads up from the low of our valley, blithely, favored by good fortune. Others observed patiently the old adage:" If at first you don't succeed, try, try, try again."

"Did it get up the hill, Ellen?" James, drawing a pail of hot water at the kitchen-sink to mix a breakfast for "that smallest sow" inquired of us, then by a window watching the course of that which was bearing off the students, including Granddaughter, to town.

"Yes-like a bird!" we replied.

"Good!" he said, relief in his voice." A car could easily slip into the ditch this morning, with the roads as they are."

Granddaughter is away this evening, gone with other misses to an event which is wreathed with enchantment. It is a prenuptial shower for a young lass of a neighboring community. The bride-to-be, is a petite lady, young, brown-eyed, and fair. A business girl, as it happens, and the daughter of a village home.

"There" one commented to us this afternoon "educate a girl, and what do they do?"

"Get married!" we chuckled.' And isn't that what they're intended to do?"

"Yes" he said "but then, there goes the education! It's lost."

But is it? Is any such learning or skill ever lost or useless? On the contrary though it may leave office or school, that acquired by a girl goes on to enrich the home and community, in which she comes to dwell. Marriage never destroys. It builds. And the years add their wisdom. It opens doors often to new and wider horizons.

Has a woman had business or technical training? How many calls in the home and community, and farther, there will be for her services! Has she had a musical education? That too will be an asset in unsuspected ways and in a widened scope in this new life to which she has come ... Does a woman mix a better cake, make a better loaf... knit, sew, weave? The world, needy and grateful, will likely beat a path to her door.

"No need of girls going to college" he continued." No, let them learn at home with their mothers, how to cook and bake and keep house, and altogether make a man happy, say I."

"Yes. But come reverses in fortunes-husbands can become ill, and even die! Then when she must assume the responsibility of earning a living, it's the professional training that will stand her in good stead. It will be her best standby "we said.

A coolness obtained today. And sometimes little flurries of snow, as light as eiderdown drifted along the light-clad, white fields. But our woodsmen were

IDA BAILEY ALLEN
Ten Interlocking Factors Add Up To Good Nutrition

"JUST what range would you say is covered by the word nutrition, Madame?" asked the Chef.

"There are ten interlocking factors," I replied; "food production, food distribution, the nutrients of foods, buying power of the family, social customs, religious or other beliefs, natural— genetic—makeup of each individual knowledge of nutrition or lack of it, such as food values and how to balance meals, personal habits such as over- eating, under-eating, wrong eating and exercise and finally the general health, especially of the digestive system.

"The right production, home preparation and use of fresh vegetables and fruits is of great importance in nutrition.

"Let's talk about this in our column this week, Chef," I suggested.
