CHAPTER VI.

AN instant Courtland had regained complete possession of himself. His distracting passion—how distracting he had never realized—was gone! His clear sight—no longer distorted by sentiment—had come back; he saw everything in its just proportion—his duty to the plantation, the helpless freedman threatened by lawless fury; the two women—no longer his one tantalizing vision, but only a passing detail of the work before him. He saw them now through no aberrating mist of tenderness or expediency—but with the single directness of the man of action.

The shot had clearly been intended for Cato. Even if it were an act of mere personal revenge, it showed a confidence and security in the would-be assassin that betokened cooperation and an organized plan. He had availed himself of the thunder storm, the flash and long reverberating roll of sound—an artifice not unknown to border ambush—to confuse discovery at the instant. Yet the attack might be only an isolated one; or it might be the beginning of a general raid upon the syndicate's freedmen. If the former, he could protect Cato from its repetition by guarding him in the office until he could be conveyed to a place of safety; if the latter, he must at once collect the negroes at his quarters, and take Cato with him. He resolved upon the latter course. The quarters were half a mile from the Dows's dwelling—which was two miles away.

He sat down and wrote a few lines to Miss Dows stating that in view of some threatened disturbances in the town, he thought it advisable to keep the negroes in their quarters, whether he was himself going. He sent her his housekeeper and the child, as they had both better remain at a place of security until he returned to town. He gave the note to Zoe, bidding her hasten by the back garden across the fields. Then he turned to Cato.

"I am going with you to the quarters to-night," he said, quietly, "and you can carry your pistol back to the armory yourself." He handed him the weapon. The negro received it gratefully, but suddenly cast a searching glance at his employer. Courtland's face, however, betrayed no change. When Zoe had gone, he continued, tranquilly: "We will go by the back way through the woods." As the negro started slightly, Courtland continued, in the same even tone: "The sulphur you smelt just now, Cato, was the smoke of a gun fired at you from the street. I don't propose that the shot shall be repeated under the same advantages."

"The negro became violently agitated. "He was dat'nk'n' hound Tom Higbee," he said, huskily.

Courtland looked at him sharply. "Then there was something more than words passed between him and you, Cato. What happened? Come! speak out!"

"He lashed me with his whip, and I gib him one right under de yean, and drapped him," said Cato, recovering his courage with his anger at the recollection. "I had a right to defend myself, sah."

"Yes, and I hope you'll be able to do so now," said Courtland, calmly, his face giving no sign of his conviction that Cato's fate was doomed by that single retaliating blow. "But you'll be safer at the quarters." He passed into his bedroom, took a revolver from his bed-head and a derringer from the drawer, both of which he quickly slipped beneath his buttoned coat and returned.

"When we are in the fields clear of the house, keep close by my side, and even try to keep step with me. What you have to say, say now; there must be no talking to betray our position—we must go silently, and you'll have enough to do to exercise your eyes and ears. I shall stand between you and any attack, but I expect you to obey orders."

They stepped out into the night without hesitation. He opened the back door, motioned to Cato to pass out, followed him, looked at the door behind them and taking the negro's arm walked beside the low palings to the end of the garden, where they climbed the fence and stood upon the open field beyond.

Unfortunately, it had grown lighter with the breaking of the heavy clouds, and lusty gleams of moonlight chased each other over the field, or struck a glitter from standing rain pools between the little hillocks. To cross the open field and gain the fringe of woods on the other side was the nearest way to the quarters, but for the moment was the most exposed course; to follow the hedge to the bottom of the field and the boundary fence and then cross at right angles, in its shadow, would be safer, but they would lose valuable time. Believing that Cato's venturesome assault was still hovering near with his comrades, Courtland cast a quick glance down the shadowy line of hedge beside them. Suddenly Cato grasped his arm and pointed in the same direction, where the boundary fence he had noticed—a barrier of rough palings—crossed the field. With the moon low on the other side of it, it was a mere black silhouette, broken only by bright, silver openings and gaps along its surface that indicated the moonlit field beyond. At first Courtland saw nothing else. Then he was struck by the fact that these openings became successively and regularly eclipsed as with the passing of some opaque object behind them. It was a file of men on the other side of the fence, keeping in its shelter as they crossed the field towards his house. Roughly calculating from the passing observations, there must have been twelve or fifteen in all.

A Kingston Orangeman.

KINGSTON, April 17.—Mr. James Blair, of Napanee, whose case has been creating so much interest in that locality, is well known in the Kingston city. He was a resident of Kingston for fourteen years, and it was while he was engaged as cutter for Mr. Livingstone, of this place, that he contracted Bright's disease of the kidneys. His Orange friends in Kingston are delighted to know that he is cured of this terrible disease by using Dodd's Kidney Pills. Many of them who have been similarly troubled with backache, rheumatism and kindred complaints have started using Dodd's Kidney Pills, and several marvelous cures are already reported. Mr. Blair joined the Orange order in 1854, and is the oldest Orangeman in Napanee. He has been a delegate to the Orange Grand Lodge, and has held several important offices in the order. His friends considered his case as incurable, and are of course amazed at his wonderful recovery.

Scott's Emulsion does not debilitate the stomach as other cough medicines do; but on the contrary, it improves digestion and strengthens the stomach. Its effects are immediate and pronounced.

"I hope you are not getting pneumonia," Mr. Stingman said, anxiously.

"I would be glad to get anything new," answered his wife in a dejected tone.

HEART FAILURE, FAINTNESS, ACUTE DYSPEPSIA,
with Complete Nervous Prostration.

Cured by Using HAWKER'S NERVE & STOMACH TONIC.

A LADY'S EXPERIENCE.

Mr. Wm. Thompson of Moncton, N. B., writes: "For 2 years past my wife has suffered with Acute Dyspepsia accompanied with complete nervous prostration and a smothering sensation about the heart which frequently produced an attack of faintness. She became weak and nervous, lost all energy, and had a constant feeling of dread. She suffered with indigestion and the stomach after eating, which was usually followed by the smothering sensation about the heart and fainting spells. She tried a great many remedies and was treated by the doctors for some time, but obtained no relief. She became so emaciated that her ribs were so prominent that she was scarcely recognizable. Her physician suggested that she try HAWKER'S NERVE AND STOMACH TONIC AND LIVER PILLS. She had produced remarkable results. In several cases he has cured her. We did not obtain immediate relief from this medicine after taking the second dose, and had continued to improve ever since until today she is as well as ever, and can enjoy her food without any suffering. I cannot speak too highly of these valuable medicines which have restored my wife to health and strength and saved much suffering and expense."

Rev. Henry M. Spike, Rector of Moncton, N. B., writes: "I have frequently acquainted with Mrs. Thompson's case, and am greatly pleased that the medicine which I recommended to her produced such remarkable results. Sold by all druggists and general dealers. TONIC 50 cts.; PILLS 25 cts. Manufactured by the HAWKER MEDICINE CO. Ltd. St. John, N. B.

P. E. ISLAND.

PARTIES using the Telephone would find talking so much more pleasant and they would observe the following rules:-

- 1st. Speak with the mouth about four inches from the transmitter.
- 2nd. Speak in a moderate tone of voice, not too loud and distinctly.
- 3rd. Do not talk into the telephone so as to cover the ear, just as if you wished to shut out all other sounds. Do not press too hard on the ear.
- 4th. It is possible to talk and be heard when standing back two or three feet from the transmitting apparatus, but it is not a pleasant mode of conversation, is entirely unnecessary, and is a useless waste of wind and lungs, besides being very annoying to all within range of your voice.

Cured of a Severe Case of Dyspepsia by using Groder's Botanic Dyspepsia Syrup.

Mrs. Lizzie A. Knowlton, Liberty, Me.

She is the wife of a well-known Spring Bed manufacturer, W. J. Knowlton, and by him is known to be "Groder's" remedy that cured him of his bad attack of dyspepsia.

She says: "GENTLEMEN—For several years I have been afflicted with dyspepsia and a complicated stomach and liver trouble. The food I ate would distress me terribly and fill my stomach with gas. I was greatly troubled with dizziness, my appetite was poor, and I had a very bad cough, and was very nervous, could not sleep, and it felt as if my whole system seemed to be affected; was unable to attend to my business, and medicines gave me no relief or benefit, and I had not all faith in them, but to gratify the request of my husband I decided to try Groder's Botanic Dyspepsia Syrup. Before I had taken one bottle I was greatly improved. I followed its directions and continued its use, and today I am in my usual good health, can sleep, eat, and enjoy life, thank you very much for Groder's Syrup."

Respectfully,
Mrs. Lizzie A. Knowlton, Liberty, Me.
