No Loveless Union For English Duke

NEW YORK, May 17—(CP)—The Duke of Windsor says that long before he became King he was determined not to marry except by the dictates of "my own heart."
In the latest instalment of his memoirs about his life as Prince of Wales, the Duke says that his continued bachelorhood was one of the things that "puzzled and worried" his father, King George V.
"Neither he nor my mother ever really tried to push me into marriage," he said. "Nevertheless signs and hints were not wanting that in the judgment the time had come for me to take a wife and settle down."
But he was determined "under no circumstances to contract a loveless marriage. . . I had seen too many unhappy unions of this character to wish to risk one myself."
The Duke pictures his father as a man clinging to the ways of the 19th century and at a loss to understand his son's revolt against "the relentless formality" of court life.
The Duke attributes some of his own restlessness to his wide-spread travels in the 1920s: "The younger countries overseas had taught me new and freer ways."
His story abounds with anecdotes of his travels, including his Canadian tour of 1919, when he experienced days which "in some ways were the most exhilarating that I have ever known."
His visits to the United States disturbed his father, particularly after sensational newspaper headlines had been seen by King George.
"In his severest tones," wrote the Duke, "he said: 'If this vulgarism represents the American attitude toward people in your position, little purpose would be served in your exposing yourself again to this kind of treatment.'"
"Of all the information I brought back I think what delighted him most was the following doggerel picked up in a Canadian border town:
"Four and twenty Yankees, feeling very dry,
"Went across the border to get a drink of rye.
"When the rye was opened, the Yankees began to sing
"God bless America, but God save the King!"

It is interesting to note that the auxiliary this year is celebrating its sixty second anniversary as it was organized November 19, 1883.
A prayer was read in unison after which different parts were read by members.
The closing hymn was Lead On O King Eternal.
The business period opened with Mrs. Lloyd Gillespie the president in the chair. Minutes of last meeting were read and approved.
It was decided to send for two dozen mite boxes for each W. M. S. and Mission Band. Next meeting to be held June 14 at home of Mrs. Ivan Turner with Mrs. Archie Auld as leader and Mrs. Earl Rodd charge of study book. Roll call to be answered with word charity.
