of the dear Old Briar-patch. They sat there with their long ears straight up listening for that hateful sound. They heard it again and yet again. It came from several directions. Each time they heard it, their hearts gave a little jump. All the beauty of a beautiful day was gone. Instead of being beautiful the day had become dreadful. The terrible guns were carrying fright and suffering and death to innocent furred and feathered folk, their friends and neighbors.

"I hope you'll stay home now, Peter Rabbit," whispered Little Mrs. Peter.

folk. Peter shivered. Yes, sir, Peter shivered. It wasn't that he was afraid for himself just then; he wasn't afraid. That sound had come a long distance. The hunter with that dreadful gun was much too far away to be feared at present. But Peter knew what that hateful sound meant. He knew that it meant that the most dreadful part of the whole year had begun. He knew that from now on for many frightful weeks no one among the furred and feathered folk, save the very smallest ones, would feel safe during the daytime. Only after the Black Shadows had crept from the purple hills and drawn the curtain of darkness over the Green Meadows and the Green Forest, the Big River and the Old Pasture, would those who lived in those places be released from constant fear.

Mr. and Mrs. Ambrose McNeill, Wellington Centre, P. E. Island.

Dear Gerlie and Ambie:— On this very joyous occasion, your twenty-fifth wedding anniversary, we, your friends and relatives have assembled here tonight to offer our heartiest congratulations and our sincerest best wishes for many happy returns and we hope that twenty-five years from this date many of us will be able to join with you in celebrating your golden wedding anniversary.

Since your marriage a quarter of a century ago, you have done much to win our admiration. You have filled these years with honest work and industry, which has brought to you a fair measure of prosperity.

You have shared your joys and sorrows, and labored together to provide all the comforts of a happy home for your large family of five lovely daughters and five sons.

During these twenty-five years of wedded life, you have proved your worth to the community and to your church and have always been helpful in all that pertained to the good of both, and old and young have enjoyed the hospitality of your home.

By our meeting here tonight we are only trying to express in some small way our appreciation of your kindness and to show the love and respect in which you are held by all.

We would like you now to please accept these gifts as a little token of our love and esteem, accompanied by the earnest hope and prayer that the silver chain which has bound your lives together for a quarter of a century may hold for many years, bringing joy and happiness to you and your loved ones.

Signed on behalf of your friends and neighbors of Wellington Centre.
