

HUNTERS' CORNER

Wildgeese in Field Tell That Spring Has Arrived

Once again the pulse stirring music of wildgeese in flight tells us, plainer than words, that spring is here. The full flight is under way and at the moment both fall to be a record breaker. Their built in radar system must have tipped them off that King Winter's last kick, a real block buster, was poised and ready for delivery. They have our weather men in a corner when it comes to an accurate predicting of immediate weather forecasts. If it were possible to have a wildgoose radar installed in Route 101, sure, you'd be in a hurry. To give him his due he gives us the best possible service that can be expected from mere man.

I have learned over the years to read wildgeese the wildgoose language almost as well as a some times can sense when their husbands have something to hide whether it be good, bad or indifferent. When I was on the road as game warden at I needed to do find out whether or not pre-season shooting of ducks was taking place on any specific marsh was to bed down at some vantage point a day sixty their actions, a simpler process with wildgeese when one can read their language.

For instance: Last Sunday morning my partner and I took an early morning drive along the South shore as far as Orwell. The geese patronizing the Jones' fields abutting C row n Point were feeding contentedly and scarcely raised the odd head when we stopped the car for a good look-see and then went on with their feeding.

A DIFFERENT STORY
It was a different story in the Seal River area. We could hear the air vibrating with a steady throb of goose music as a heavy flight, hundreds and hundreds of them, have in sight from the direction of the China Point area. The bulk of this flight was following the line of the Seal River but a segment swung off toward the Irving's Bar. Several flocks wanted to drop in on a large stubble field about 200 yards from where the car was parked on the highway but the minute they spotted the car they swung off and refused to cross the highway.

VOICES TOLD TO KILL
LYNN, Mass. (AP) — Mrs. Florence Staples, 38, a former mental patient, told police Thursday "voices told me" to kill two of her three children with a shotgun. Simple in their beds were Lola, 6, and Daniel, 17. Detective Capt. John Linehan said the mother would be charged with two counts of murder.
