SIXTY YEARS.

The city flung its banners forth, Red bonfires blazed around The Empire of Britannia's Isles—

The city flashed, with light's delight Its radiance gilded gloom,— As from dull, sonid chambers came

No mortal eye had e'er beheld On earth such pageantry, Such gorgeous splendor as begirt

A little woman, frail with age, Whose fair white hand embraced The sceptre of the wisest rule

The Roman cohorts guarded well Caesar's licentious feasts, But riot riled and mockery jeered

Long lines of stately ships of war Teeming with valiant life, Chorus'd thro' thund'rous cannon throats

Victoria's sailors guard the realm, Brave on the storm-rous'd deep; Her gallant swordmen grasp the blade,

The sunshine of God's blessing falls On her who knelt adown To own allegiance to the King

Oh! women of our Empire, hold This virtue charter dear, Far above price of rubies is
