What is a Classic?

Mark Twain once said, "A classic is something that everybody wants to have read, but nobody wants to read." If the Bible be included among the classics, the humanization of religion is manifestly untrue, for people around the world are reading this "classic" in more than eleven hundred languages and dialects.

The Bible Society has always believed that the Word of God is a practical book and can help men and women, no matter what their circumstances in life may be and so it strives to give the Word to every man regardless of race, creed or color. . . . and in his own language. Mounting costs are seriously threatening curtailment of the production of the Scriptures and unless we continue to support the Society generously — many men and women will remain in spiritual darkness and despair.
