FOUL PLAY.

Rumors of foul play in connection with the Plebiscite vote in Quebec are in the air. The 'Soleil,' the principal federal government organ at Quebec, has concocted plebiscite figures showing a majority of 91,295 in Quebec against prohibition, over against majorities for prohibition in Ontario of 14,911; Nova Scotia, 26,350; New Brunswick, 17,378; British Columbia, 1,184; Prince Edward Island, 6,160; Territories, 2,024; Manitoba, 3,194, making a total majority against of 20,094. Commenting upon this statement the Montreal Witness says:

"The Liberal organs in all parts of the country had already assured us on their own authority that the government was not going to obey the plebiscite. Even many papers which strongly advocated prohibition, with amazing coolness assumed that of course under the circumstances it would not be granted. This was too universal not to show that the government was very anxious to manufacture a public opinion in this sense, and we see the success of the tactics in the tone of many expressions of genuine prohibitionists which have come to hand since. It was obviously necessary, however, to do something more than this to save the Government from a distinct dilemma, as there were always those who would be simple enough to hold that the Government had broken its promise. The Soleil seems to realize this, and the above figures are its way of getting the Government out of that hole. We are not prepared to say that the returns from the French parishes do not show a negative majority of ninety or a hundred thousand. We see nothing to hinder its being made much greater according to the methods used in some quarters."

If the majority of votes against prohibition is really greater in Quebec than the majority in favor of prohibition is throughout all the other Provinces of Canada, the prohibitionists must of course submit. But if this is not the case, if as the Witness hints there has been ballot stuffing or other foul play in Quebec then it is incumbent upon the majorities in all the other Provinces to insist that justice shall be done. We should like in the first place to see an official statement of the count in Quebec, and then an investigation into "the methods used in some quarters." The government must not suppose that they will get out of their hole by means of a fraud. Canada is not to be ruled by the unscrupulous clique of Quebec.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

—Signs are that our Liberal Conservative Government also, have a central official manufactory of public opinion. We note in both the Guardian and Patriot an identical letter ridiculing and misrepresenting the position taken by our teachers in convention. The Guardian, however, has the grace to say that the correspondent is not to be taken seriously.

—Our Legislature, at its last session, enacted a law for the preservation of partridge, which are among our most valued game birds. By the provisions of the statute a penalty of $25 for each offence against the law may be imposed upon any person killing, taking, having in possession, vending, offering or exhibiting for sale any partridge killed within this Province. Constables, police men and the market clerk are also directed to enforce the act when infractions of it come under their notice. In the face of this enactment, reports say, boys in the country—as well as some of our city sportsmen—are yet destroying the birds. What is the Government doing while this law of the Province is thus being violated?

Toronto Globe: Americans are now attributing the war to yellow journalism. But it does not seem to occur to them that yellow journalism is an effect and not a cause.

THE REV. FAY MILLS.

Sir.—The following, which I have clipped from one of our daily papers, I send you for publication in case the Morning Guardian might, in suiting its "independent" views, fail to see it:

"Benjamin Fay Mills, in the course of an address at the Hollis Street Theatre last evening on the topic 'Why I Became a Liberal in Religion,' says:

"My father was an orthodox minister, and in my youth, after the strictest sect of our religion, I lived a Pharisee. At 20 I passed my theological examinations and was ordained to the ministry by the Orthodox Congregationalists. Soon afterwards I announced my rejection of the dogma of eternal torture. At 25 I had given up the expiatory theory of the atonement and the equal inspiration of the books of the Bible. By 30 I had substituted salvation by character for salvation only through Christ, although I still believed in Christ as a final revelation of God and called men to personal allegiance to Him.

"Five years later I had gained a conception of Christ as the Saviour of society rather than the deliverer of the individual, and I began asking men 'to come to Jesus.'"

"I saw clearly what are called the foundation facts of orthodoxy, such as the biblical account of creation, the fall of man, the history of Israel, the prophecies of the Old Testament, and the 'supernatural' life and the work of Jesus and his followers, were, in light of science and history, untrue, or at least improbable. I also found it necessary to abandon the 'fundamental' doctrines supposed to be established by those so-called facts. But the great influence on my religious thought was the discerning of better and genuine truths and the possibility of a nobler religion. There was expansion of my thought concerning God, and I found O. e. vastly better than any God of antiquity."

If I mistake not the gentlemen referred to occupied the First Methodist Church in Charlottetown, morning, noon, and night for quite a long time during which he drew crowded houses. I may be wrong, but my memory also reminds me that the esteemed pastor of St. James' Church refused to take part in the Fay Mills Revival and thereby incurred the displeasure of some of his congregation. The Rev. Mr. Fullerton now has his vicar on.
