

FOR YOUNG MEN.

your disorder. But the lesson learned from the book of nature and the voice in the depths of your soul, is not only one of life and death, but also of immortality. Your life account is carried into the future, and there the balance is struck, which shall stand eternally to your joy or your pain.

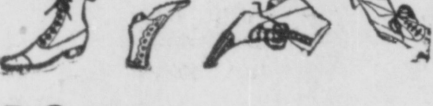

Meditating in sincerity of heart on these natural truths, you will find the Gospel of Christ dearer than ever to your hearts, and will discover a still deeper meaning in His assurance: "I am the way, the truth, and the life." These truths, and not the inertia of the multitudes, mark the level to which you should rise, and discover the summit of human possibilities. The way thence is long and difficult, but so is every way that leads to what is best.

Touching on intolerance I do not mean to make an apology for indifference in belief. I do not mean that every shallow opinion, every ridiculous theory—of which there is at present a supply equal to any demand—should be received with consideration. Neither do I mean that the truth can never be attained with certainty, and that consequently all tenets should be respected for the reason that they are all equally liable to error. Not at all. What I mean is that, whilst holding certain truths too vital to be overlooked, and too sacred to be compromised or tampered with, we should treat those who differ from us with charitable forbearance. A man may be both honest and intelligent, and yet, owing to his education, local environment, and natural temperament, may believe things that are strange indeed. Then in matters of method and expediency our opinions should be temperate. We have no right to assume that we have been granted a monopoly of common sense. When a man of ordinary intelligence expresses an opinion in relation to matters with which he is tolerably well acquainted, we may not agree with him, but we have no guarantee that our judgment is right and his wrong. If these remarks should seem to you uncalled for, this is why I make them: because you sometimes meet young men of many admirable parts, whose influence for good should be extensive, but who become narrow-minded and sour of disposition, and unable to cooperate in any good work, simply because they cannot be persuaded that others may think differently from them without being either knaves or fools.

My dear young friends, before closing I would add a few words more. We take for granted that to-day you are honest, honorable and possessed of a keen sense of right and wrong. So have others been who have gone forth into the world from the halls of colleges, but how many have persevered? That's the serious question. Giving themselves up to what is most enjoyable in life, and accommodating themselves to the easy habits of those around them, they lost their delicate sensitiveness of conscience and gradually sank to a state of vicious indifference, becoming, if not remarkably wicked, at least purely worldly men—"Of the earth, earthly." The same insinuating dangers await you, and you need to be deeply convinced of the existence of them, if you hope to guard against them successfully.

You have not, it is true, completed a programme of studies so elaborate as that of big universities. Yet I venture to say your training hitherto has been of a higher order than very many of our lauded universities can give. It has qualified you to think sanely and argue logically—conditions without which no congeries of data, let them be collected from all the corners of the globe, will make a man truly educated. The highest form of education (I may say, the only true form) is that which is concerned with developing the

POTENTIALITY OF ONE'S OWN SOUL. The judicial habit—the habit of weighing evidence and ascertaining their true value—is one of the most valuable products of education. But it is rare to an amazing degree in the instructed men of to-day; and yet we would prefer not to agree with Ruskin that "modern education for the most part signifies giving people the faculty of thinking wrong on every conceivable subject of importance to them". However, you should continue to cultivate assiduously this judicial habit. You shall have much need of it, for the secular periodicals, and a number of so-called religious ones, are rife with articles that either call into doubt, or openly deny, doctrines hitherto revered as essential parts of the Christian heritage. The boldness of assertion and fascination of literary styles, often so characteristic of such literature, lend it an air of plausibility that leads many an uncritical mind into deadly error. But you, if you develop your minds on the lines already marked out, shall not be ensnared by external forms; you will seek after and investigate, the substance of the arguments brought against Christian truth, and will show that they are either founded on erroneous data or false supposition, conducted according to fallacious reasoning, or directed against a tenet they have already misrepresented. To qualify yourselves the better for this task, study the works of the great Christian thinkers. Life is short and, if you read rightly, you cannot read much, so read only what is best.

My dear young friends, I see in you the foundation of lofty hopes for our country. I am no pessimist; I do not believe with those who continually proclaim the nineteenth century the worst of the Christian era; but I know that certain evils threaten the public well-being far more seriously than ever they did in earlier times; and, as a safeguard against them, we need honest, high-minded men in every office that influences the public conscience. We need them on the bench, at the bar, and in the pulpit, but above all, just at present, we need them in politics and journalism.

The greatest public vices of the day are centered in these two departments; and if you would ask me to give that vice a name, I would call it lying—lying by word, lying by act, and lying cowardly silence. There are exceptions, it is true, but they are only voices crying out in the wilderness. In you, therefore, and in other young men like you, who are still free from the poisonous taint, lie the hopes of our country.

Do not forget your high calling; never prostitute your faculties to the interests of any dishonourable cause, or the propagation of a lie; and your talent and education, if applied with zeal and perseverance, will confer a substantial boon on your land, and add a fresh lustre to the venerable institution that sends you forth today crowned with its honors.

AFTER DINNER.

A LONG FELT WANT FILLED BY DODD'S DYSPESPIA TABLETS.

While Curing Advanced Stages of Dyspepsia is a Tablet Taken after Dinner is Accepted Gratefully by Even the most Healy Stomach.

We eat an awful lot of trash nowadays—that is considering the use it is to our bodies when eaten. Think what a mixture has been sent down our throats at the end of an average good dinner.

The stomach has to separate the grain from the chaff, the blood-building parts from the utterly useless.

And to its extreme vexation, no doubt, it finds after it has finished its work that the greater part of the material was utterly useless.

So the fact is that the stomach is greatly overworked.

Now whether it has broken down yet or not Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets will help it.

They assist in the digesting process. They help the stomach out with its work.

If you are troubled with the severe symptoms of Dyspepsia, viz., Indigestion, Sour Stomach, Foul Breath, Wind on the Stomach, Biliouness, Waterbrash, Heartburn, Catarrh of the Stomach, Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets will give your stomach a chance to take time to cure itself.

That is the only way it can be done. If you starve yourself to rest your stomach you starve your stomach also, for it needs nourishment like the rest of you.

If your stomach is still "game," but you know from experience to refrain from certain dainties, use Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets after every meal and eat anything you like.

The June number of the P. E. Island Magazine is already almost entirely sold out. A good deal larger edition than usual will be printed for July. This and the August number are bought largely by tourists and Islanders from abroad. Advertisers should make a note of this fact and get their copy ready at once.
