Opening lead — six of clubs. By and large, the American team which starts play today at Lake Como for the world championship is not particularly noted for making fancy bids or psychics. The six members who compose the team—George Raape, Alvin Roth, Sidney Silodor, John R. Crawford, Tobias Stone and this writer—are generally down-the-middle players who have achieved their reputation in the United States by their degree of perfection and technical superiority rather than through psychological tactics.

This is not to say that they are averse to larcenous exploits when the situation calls for their exercise. Each of them is capable of stealing the ball from their opponents, and has on many occasions done so, but such tactics are the exception rather than the rule.

George Raape, for example managed a nifty steal when an American team (including Raape, Crawford and Becker) met and defeated an Italian team for the world title in Naples in 1951. Raape held the South hand. His heart response reflected the fear he harbored that West might have a vulnerable game in that suit. This fear, later materialized, proved well-founded, although a four heart contract by the Italian pair would have been hazardous venture requiring a great deal of luck to succeed.

When North (not knowing of the psychic) raised to two hearts over the intervening club bid, Raape attempted to extricate by retreating to three diamonds. North's three spade bid three left Raape little choice but to notrump and hope for the best. Much to his surprise, he not only found himself playing this contract, but also, by a stroke of fortune in the form of an ill chosen opening lead, making it.

The club queen won the first trick and Raape wasted no time in grabbing six diamond tricks and two spades to make the bid. Of course, a heart lead would have pulverized the contract, but this was a pretty impossible lead for West to make on the bidding.
