THE SMUGGLER OF ST. JEAN;

OR, THE HIDALGO'S WARD.

A STORY OF THE SPANISH COAST.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

CHAPTER XIII.

It was soon noised abroad in Denia that there was to be a novel spectacle at the Plaza de Toros. There had been confined in one of the close sheds for several weeks two powerful black bulls from the Sierra Morena, and one of these was to be met in the arena by a single matador. These bulls were known to be the most fierce and dang-rous of any that had been brought to the Plaza de Toros for years, and it had been confidently expected that at least twenty horses would go down before either one of them ere he could be conqured. What then was the astonishment of the people when they heard that a single man, and he on foot, was to do battle against one of these monsters. At first they refused to believe it; but finally, when the alcalde had caused official proclamation to be made, there could be no more doubt.

The day at length arrived, and at an early hour the people began to assemble about the Plaza. There came men, women and children, from Denia, from Mollinell, from Tuelada, from Gandia, and even from the distant town of Alamata; for the news had spread far and wide, and none were so poor that they could not afford the day and the money for such an entertainment.

Not far from the entrance to the lower apartment, or pit, of the Plaza de Toros, beneath the shade of a citron grove, stood three men engaged in earnest conversation. The eldest of the group was Rafael Bertrand, the Smuggler chief; and the other two were Jose and Lopez, the sons of old Manuel Gardella.

'Who can it be if it be not our own Leon?' said Jose, in continuation of the conversation already begun.

'It must be Leon,' responded Bertrand 'for I know of only one other man in Valencia who would dare to do battle singly against one of those fierce brutes.'

'And who may that one other man be?' asked Jose, honestly.

'It is Jose Gardella,' replied the chief, surveying the magnificent proportions of the young man with pride.'

'You flatter me, Captain.'

Not a bit. Have I not spoken the truth?'

'By my soul,' cried Jose, rising to his full height with the inspiring thought, 'I wish I were in Leon's place!' And as he spoke he instinctively clutched the handle of a long knife which he wore concealed in his bosom.

'If it is Leon who is to do this battle,' said Lopez, 'there must be some meaning more than is apparent. Captain, you have thrown out some hints which leads me to think that you know more than you have told.'

'I do know more than I have to'd and more than I am at present prepared to tell,' replied Bertrand. 'Let it suffice for the present that we understand that Bernardo d'Acosta is Leon's enemy. Ha, the doors are opened, and the people are rushing in. If we would secure a favorable position we must make haste. Follow me, and let us keep together.'

In a very short time after the doors had been thrown open, the vast amphitheatre was filled with spectators, and it was fully an hour before anything like order could be established. At length, however, the seats were occupied, and those who came in later were forced to put up with standing room. Most conspicious in the row of richly ornamented boxes was that occupied by the alcalde; but he was not alone. By his side sat his fair ward, the Lady Estelle d'Avilla, and towards her many eyes were turned, for she was acknowledged the most beautiful damsel of Denia. Directly back of Estelle sat Nina; and these three alone occupied the box.

Hark! Like the rumble of distant thunder came a prolonged roar from the den where the waiting beast was confined.

'Mercy!' gasped Estelle, turning to Nina, and taking her hand, 'I wish I had not come It must be a brave man who has given himself to this terrible ordeal, and I would not see him suffer.'

'Hush!' whispered Nina, bending her lips close to the ear of her mistress, 'your guardian is watching you. The matador can be nothing to us. — Ha! see—see! — The red curtain is pulled aside. Santa Diosa! What a noble looking man!'

Estelle looked in the direction pointed out. The matador had leaped lightly into the arena, and now stood facing the alcalde's box He was dressed in a close fitting garb of black velvet, with no ornament save a small red cross upon the left breast; and his arms were simply a stout Roman sword and red shield.

'Maria Santisima! It is he!' burst from Estelle's lips; and she would have started from her seat in the wild thrill of the moment had not Nina caught her by the arm, and held her back.

Don Bernardo did not fail to notice what was passing in his box.

CHAPTER XVI.

A murmur of admiration ran through the vast assembly as the youthful matador stood within the arena; but in a moment more there were notes of uneasiness and concern. The female portion, especially, were loud in their expressions of doubt and anxiety. A form of perfect manly beauty; a face fair and handsome; a brow bold and intellectual; and a bearing of surpassing grace and dignity brought the hero very near to the hearts of the damsels of Valencia.

Presently a sound broke upon the ear which hushed every murmur, and caused many hearts to rest painfully from their beatings It was a repetition of that fearful thunder; but this time nearer than before. Nearer and nearer—louder and louder—until the whole structure shook to its very foundations.

'See! see!' came in a hushed whisper from a thousand lips.

The great black curtain was drawn aside by means of cords fixed for that purpose, and quickly afterwards the bull came rushing upon the scene. He stopped before he had reached the centre of the arena, and took a survey of the throng that surrounded him. Then he sent forth one of those deep, vibrating roars that causes the stoutest heart to quake, and plowed his sharp horns into the earth, throwing the dirt far up among the spectators. He was a powerful animal and an ugly one. His color was almost black; his hair short and crisp upon his back and sides, while upon the breast and brow it was long and shaggy, giving him leonine appearance of power and ferocity. Such a bull had not been seen at the plaza before for years; and among the more sympathizing of the assembly the wish was general, and freely expressed, that the youthful matador might withdraw himself before he was attacked

But Leon Murillo noticed not these signs. He had fixed his eyes upon the bull, and he seemed to have thought of nothing else. Once he glanced up towards the alcalde's box, and a careful observer might have noticed a tightening of the hand upon his sword-hilt as he met the anxious light of a pair of swimming eyes that beamed upon him.

'Carajo! Have a care!'

The note of warning came from a point near the barrier, where stood three men habited in seamen's garbs. A smile and a nod were the signs by which Leon Murillo gave his friends to understand that he recognized them, and on the next instant his attention was demanded in another direction. The bull had discovered his red shield, and had started towards him, stopping once to tear the earth with his horns, and then rushing on with headlong speed. The matador waited until the beast had come within two yards of him, when he nimbly leaped aside, leaving his shield where one of the sharp horns just grazed it, and plunging his sword into the swart neck of the passing enemy. The bull, with increasing fury, turned at the barrier, and again made towards the matador, whom he now evidently recognized as a deadly enemy. With a quaking roar he dashed forward, again to miss his mark, and again to feel the sharp steel pierce his neck. Four times did Leon Murillo thus avoid the horns of the beast, and then the bull, as though he had gained an insight into the tactics of his antagonist, stopped within three yards of where the matador stood regarding him with a deadly look. His shaggy breast was covered with blood, and when he shook his head the crimson drops were scattered far and near. The matador must now adopt a new course, for the bull began to advance slowly, sending forth a hoarse, guttural roar, and keeping his eyes fixed steadily upon his foe.

Leon saw very plainly that he must now be the attacking party, otherwise, the chances were that he would be overthrown; so he lifted the red shield almost up to his eye, and giving it a quick, vibratory motion, he uttered a loud yell, and leaped boldly forward. He had not miscalculated. The sudden motion of the bright red shield; the loud trumpet like yell, and the unexpected leap directly upon him, caused the monster to hesitate in his tracks, and on that instant the matador passed him, with the shield intervening, at the same time giving him a severe wound very near the seat of life. The plaudits of the multitude were deafening. 'Bravo, Matador! Bravo! Bravo!' The men waved their hats aloft, prolonging the cry, while the women—those who had the strong nerves—flaunted their bright kerchiefs in the air.

While the multitude were thus applauding, the bull had withdrawn close to the barrier, where stood for some minutes with his head lowered, the red blood trickling down his swart breast, and dripping almost a stream as it fell to the ground. 'The beast is sick! He is dying!' cried several of those who were in distant parts of the amphitheatre; but one or two experienced sportsmen who were nearer to the brute saw that the fire of his eye was not dimmed He was only considering. Presently he raised his head, and uttered a frightful roar; his tail waving slowly to and fro, while the hair along the line of the back stood up in a frightful ridge. He saw his enemy standing in the centre of the arena, and with one more terrible roar, he darted forward. Leon succeeded in leaping aside, though he missed his stroke, and came very near losing his footing.

'Have a care!' spoke some one near at hand. 'The bull is growing mad.'

Leon nodded, but did not remove his eyes from the animal. The bull did not this time stop to turn; he kept on his way with a sweeping curve, and directly came back more furiously than before. The matador had evidently made up his mind that the conflict must not last much longer; for the continued draft upon both nerve and muscle was beginning to tell upon his arm. He stood until the beast had reached a point within two yards of him, when he sprang upon one side, leaving his shield extended so that the bull ran his face fairly upon it. Then, with the spot carefully selected, and with all his might, Leon struck. The sharp blade entered behind the shoulder, passing between the ribs, with the point towards the heart; and when it was withdrawn a dark, gushing tide followed it. On to the barrier went the bleeding brute, and there he turned; but he made no more attack. One long, subdued roar escaped him, and then, with his head bowed, he fell forward upon his knees, and after a momentary struggle to regain his feet, he rolled over upon his side and expired As the black monster lay there, gasping in the death-struggle, the vast amphitheatre was shaken to its very foundations by the shouts that went up from the assembled multitude. In the alcalde's box, Estelle d'Avilla, entirely overcome by her emotions had breathed a prayer of thanksgiving, and sank upon Nina's bosom.

But—hark—see!—What means that.

Another roar, like a peal of thunder—another rush, like the sweeping of a tornado—and another bull, black and fierce—a huge mass of bone and muscle, untamed and unfed—darts from the torril. He advances a few paces into the arena, and then stops to view the wondrous scene about him. He sees the multitude—he sees his dead mate—he sees the matador—and he evidently smells the blood; for he sends forth a horrible roar and bends his head towards the red shield, which Leon still bears upon his left arm.

'Inferno! This is wicked!' shouts a man who sits not far from the alcalde's box.

'Madre de Dios! Where are the other matadors? demands another.

'Aye—where are the fresh matadors? echo a hundred voices.

But there are no fresh matadors at hand Either they have been forbidden to enter upon the scene or they have not been allowed to come to the Plaza.

But how came the bull into the arena? 'The gate of the torril must have been left open by accident,' is the suggestion of several, while others, as they gaze up at the alcalde, and note the gloating expression upon his face, come to the conclusion that the thing was designed from the first.

'Shame! Shame!' cry the multitude.

'To the barriers! to the barriers! Leap the barriers, brave matador!' shout those who have their senses about them.

But it was too late. Leon Murillo, at first confounded by this new appearance, had waited to long to consider. The bull was upon him, and in leaping aside he had miscalculated the distance. One of the sharp horns struck him upon the left shoulder, whirling him round like a top, and throwing him violently upon the ground. The multitude were upon their feet, some of the men shouting for the keepers of the bull; others calling for more matadors and picadors; while the women screamed with terror.

'Maria Santisima! O, save him save him!' So cried Estelle d'Avilla, with her hands clasped towards heaven, and on the next instant, she sank fainting into Nina's arms.

Don Bernardo ground his teeth, and the expression of his face was perfectly diabolical. His eyes burned like fire, and as he clutched his hands upon his robe he seemed to feel that he had an enemy within his grasp.

Meanwhile the bull swept on to the barrier, and turned before Leon had regained his feet; but now, while the infuriated beast hesitated, he struggled up; but it was plainly seen that his left arm was to lame that he could not raise his sheild.

'To the barriers! Leap, leap, brave matador!'

But again it was too late. Leon dare not turn his back to flee. But help was at hand. While the multitude were gazing upon the scene in breathless torture, a young man, habited in a seaman's garb—tall and powerful in form—leaped the barrier, and sprang between Leon Murrillo and the bull. In his left hand he carried a large red kerchief, and in his right, he bore a long, gleaming knife. With shout and cry of defiance, and a waving of the red kerchief, he succeeded in attracting the attention of the bull to himself, and directly afterward the beast charged upon him. On came the furious monster, with his head bent and his long tail sweeping the air, and as the new champion slipped aside, he dexteriously threw the handkerchief upon the horns of the bull, so that it flapped down over his face, thus for the moment completely binding him; and in that moment his fate was sealed He stopped and bent his head lower down to shake off the kerchief, and as he did so the stranger stepped quickly and lightly forward, and buried the blade of his knife to the hilt between the shoulders of the bull. The mighty animal gave one leap from beneath the fatal stroke, and fell to the earth with a hoarse, dull cry of pain, breathing out his life within a few yards of the spot where lay his dead companion.

Leon Murillo caught his preserver by the hand.

'God bless you, Jose!'—you have saved my life.'

'Never mind now, Leon We'll talk on board the felucca. For the present beware of the alcalde. I have watched him, and I know he means you harm'

At this moment Don Bernardo leaped to his feet, and shouted for his officers to arrest the man who had slain the bull; but he was too late, for ere his mandate could be obeyed Jose Gardella had sprang back over the barrier and was quickly lost in the dense crowd. Then the alcalde ordered that the matador should be detained; but even in this he could not be obeyed, for the excited people, entirely carried away by enthusiasm, overleaped the barrier, and, lifting the youthful hero upon their shoulders, they bore him in triumph from the arena—bore him out from the Plaza— stopping not until they had reached the great square of Denia, where they set him down. It was soon whispered around that the youth was named Leon Murillo, and that that he was a smuggler by profession; and this raised their enthusiasm to a still higher pitch; and not until two butts of wine had been rolled forth from a neighboring cellar and emptied, could they be persuaded to let their hero go. Jose and Lopez had remained close by his side, and as soon as they found an opportunity they threw a long cloak over his shoulders to conceal his matador's garb, and then led him away

'Come,' said Jose, 'we must haste, for the officers of the alcalde are on the watch.'

The dense crowd favored their escape, and taking a narrow cross street, they soon reached the water's edge, where they found the captain, with his boat, in waiting for them.

'A narrow escape, my good Leon,' said Bertrand, after they had put off from the shore.

'For which I may thank Jose,' responded Leon, gratefully. 'I feared not the first bull, but the second was more than I had bargained. I think that the coming of that second bull was intentional.'

'Of course it was,' returned the chieftain; 'and had it not been for our foresight, and Joses's intrepidity, the diabolical plan would have succeeded; but, as it is, the villian has cut his own fingers'

'He meant that I should die?'

'He did; and he meant, too, that the end should be brought about without any apparent effort on his part; but he allowed his blind wrath to lead him astray. He is a fool as well as a knave.'

'What in the world, cried Lopez 'does the alcalde mean? Why should he seek Leon's life?'

'That is left for me yet to discover,' replied Bertrand; 'and if I am not mistaken in my surmises, I shall ere long unravel the mystery.'

In less than an hour the boat was pulled alongside the felucca, and after Leon had stepped on board, the chieftain prepared to start away again. He said he was going to the hut of the old fishermen, Miguel Pastor.

'Are Pepin and Michael Ferrara there?' asked Leon.

'Yes—I left them there this morning.'

'And you are going to see them?'

'Yes.'

Leon expressed the wish that he, too, might go; but Bertrand told him to wait.

'Michael Ferrara,' said he, 'has the ball in his hands, and when he is ready to unwind it you shall be there to see.'

With this chieftian pulled away, and Leon went below to put off his sombre suit of blood stained velvet.

It was fairly dark when Don Bernardo reached his castle, Estelle and Nina having returned before him. He met his ward in the hall, and stopped her at the foot of the stairs.

'We have had rare sport to-day, Estelle.'

His eyes gleamed like serpent's eyes, and a sardonic grin was upon his face.

The lady could make no answer.

'The bold matador was not a stranger to you, my fair and virtuous lady!'

'No,' cried Estelle, now fired with indignation 'He saved me from the hands of the Zincali—saved me from a fate worse than death.'

'For which, I suppose, you are very grateful.'

'I am, Senor.'

'I thought so from your behavior to day. Perhaps you may see the Smuggler again. Good night, lady, and may your dreams be very pleasant ones'

Estelle hurried away to her chamber where she sank upon her knees and prayed that God would deliver her from the hands of the tyrant. And she breathed another prayer—a prayer for him whom she had that day seen in mortal danger.

And while she thus prayed, Don Bernardo was in his library, pacing slowly to and fro, with his hands working nervously together.

'The die is cast! he muttered to himself. 'It is as I suspected. She loves the youthful Smuggler, and will never give her hand to me. Estelle d'Avilla, the doom that is upon you has been brought by your own hands. So much wealth must not slip from my grasp. You might have married me and lived!'

THE ORIGINAL

"WEED" SEWING MACHINE

With all the Latest Improvements,

Made by the North American Manufacturing Company.

THE "WEED" was awarded the HIGHEST PRIZE at the "Paris Exposition," as well as at other Exhibitions for a Sewing Machine, as such, and is becoming deservedly popular, adapted to ALL KINDS OF SEWING in families and manufactories. Lockstitch, Shuttle, Straight Needle. Exceedingly simple in construction.

Each Machine warranted and kept in order free of charge, and the Factory being in St. John, N. B., much time, expense and trouble, attending American Machines, are avoided.

The Most Reliable Friend!

Holloway's Ointment,

Its Searching & Healing Properties are known and recognized throughout the World.

The number of years this invaluable Ointment has stood the test of public opinion, (and the longer known the better appreciated) is a testimony of itself more convincing than anything that could be written in praise of its truly wonderful healing properties In the cure of bad legs, bad breasts, sores, wounds, and ulcers, its effect is marvellous. For ring-worm, scald-head, scrofula, and diseases of the scalp generally, there is no remedy to be compared to it. When assidiously rubbed upon the skin (previously well bathed in warm water) this Ointment is quickly absorbed into the system, and cleanses, in its passage, every part to which it is applied.

Glandular Swellings, Mumps Bronchitis, Quinsey, Sore Throats and Diptheria.

In any of the above diseases, immediate and permanent relief is obtained by effectually rubbing this detergent Ointment, twice a day, upon the neck, chest and back Its acts upon the very mainsprings of life; for through the glands pass all new matter required for the body's reparation and all old particles detrimental to its preservation. The Ointment, used conjointly with Holloway's Pills, will act so searchingly and certainly as to effect cures in the most hopeless cases.

Rheumatism, Lumbago, Contracted and Stiff Joints.

Many thousands of martyrs from the above complaints have found life almost unsupportable; yet, if Holloway's Ointment be briskly and perseveringly rubbed upon the parts affected, ease may be safely guaranteed, especially if the pores of the skin by previously opened by fomentations with warm water The gross humors require expulsion from the system; it is therefore necessary to have recourse to Holloway's admirable Pills, which, by purifying and strengthening the system, greatly assist the operation of the Ointment and facilitate and confirm they cure

Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, and Ulcerations of all kinds.

There is no medicinal preparation in the world which may be so thoroughly relied upon, in the treatment of the above ailments, as Holloway's Ointment Nothing can be so simple or safe as the manner in which it is applied, or it's action on the body, both locally and constitutionally. The Ointment, rubbed around the part affected, enters the pores just as salt enters meat. It quickly penetrates to the source of the evil and drives it from the system.

Erysipelas and Scrofulous Sores

In all irritations of the skin, sores, ulcers, burns or scrofulous enlargements of any kind, Holloway's Ointment presents a ready and easy means of cure. It manifests a peculiar power in restraining inflammation, removing stagnation, cooling the heated blood, and checking all acrimonious and unhealthy discharge.

Diseases attendant on Childhood.

Diseases incident to early life fall more and the management of the mother than the medicine man. Holloway's Ointment should therefore be regarded by her as a "Household Treasure," as it never fails in bringing out the rash in measles and scarlatina; and for the removal of all skin diseases its effect is miraculous In cases of whooping cough and croup, this invaluable Ointment should be rubbed twice a day upon the throat and chest, and the youngest invalid will derive therefrom the most soothing relief. Two or three of Holloway's famous Pills, reduced to a powder, will augment the curative powers of the Unguent.

Both the Ointment and Pills should be used in the following cases:

Bad Legs	Corns (soft)	Rheumatism
Bad Breasts	Cancers	Scald Heads
Burns	Contracted and Stiff Joints	Sore Nipples
Bunions		Sore Throats
Bite of Moschetoes and Sand Flies	Elephantiasis	Skin Diseases
	Fistulas	Scurvy
	Gout	Sore Heads
Coco-bay	Glandular Swellings	Tumours
Chiego-foot		Ulcers
Chilblains	Lumbago	Wounds
Chapped Hands	Piles	Yaws

Sold at the Establishment of PROFESSOR HOLLOWAY, 244, Strand, (near Temple Bar), London, also by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicines throughout the civilized world, at the following prices:—1s 1½d, 2s 9d, 4s 6d, 11s, 22s, and 33s each Pot.

 There is a considerable saving by taking the larger size.

HAVE APPOINTED

W. R. Watson, Chemist & Druggist

CHARLOTTETOWN,

Sole Agent for the Sale of their

CELEBRATED PERFECTED

SPECTACLES,

Which have been extensively used in Great Britain and the United States, the past eight years for which they claim the undermentioned advantages over those in ordinary use, the proof of which may be seen in their constantly increasing business during the past eight years.

1st. THAT from the perfect construction of the lenses, they assist and preserve the sight, rendering frequent changes unnecessary.

2nd. THAT they confer a brilliancy and distinctness of vision, with an amount of ease and comfort not hitherto enjoyed by spectacle wearers.

3rd THAT the material from which the Lenses are ground is manufactured specially for optic purposes, and is pure hard and brilliant, and not liable to become scratched.

4th. THAT the frames in which they are set, whether gold, silver or steel, are of the finest quality and finish, and guaranteed perfect in every respect.

They are the only Spectacles that preserve as well as assist the sight. And are cheapest because the best, always lasting many years without change being necessary

☞ One of the Firm will visit Charlottetown, at the Store of their Agent every six months, for the purpose of fitting those having difficult sights, when any spectacles sold by their agent during the interval, will be exchanged free of charge if not properly fitted.

☞ WE EMPLOY NO PEDLARS. ☜

☞ SIGHTS fitted by correspondence.
