MONTAGUE Y. P. S.

On Sunday night, May 14th, the Young People of Montague United Church held their regular weekly meeting. It was of special interest because Miss Beryl Morson consented to speak and to answer any questions that anyone might have. The C. G. I. T. were also present at this meeting. Miss Morson told us about life in India—the people, their work, and food, the caste system and the difficulties brought about by it, but most appalling of all—the illiteracy and the scant knowledge of civilization (and the unopen minds to receive knowledge) among the people. "The Indian people," said Miss Morson, "are set in their ways and believe that if they are suffering, the Lord means them to suffer and they should not do anything to ease the situation." In conclusion, she pointed out that many, many workers are needed to carry on the work not only in the Evangelistic line, the medical line, the teaching line, but in every line that civilized people in this part of the world are engaged.

W. S. Clarkson Engineer, Dies

William S. Clarkson, 50, of 1907 Washenaw Ave., a mechanical research engineer and inventor, died early yesterday morning in University Hospital as a result of a heart attack suffered at his home on March 13.

He was born on June 3, 1899, in Detroit, a son of the late Eugene and May Stoup Clarkson. He came to Ann Arbor in 1916 with his parents and entered the University's College of Engineering. Mr. Clarkson was graduated in 1920 and took post graduate work at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where he received a master's degree in 1921.

He served with the Army Air Force during World War I and with the Naval Laboratory, Washington, D. C., during World War II.

Mr. Clarkson married Inez Jean Annear in Montague, P. E. I. on Aug. 3, 1940. She survives. They returned to Ann Arbor to live in 1944.

One year ago Mr. Clarkson founded the "Speeddryer Corp.", with a group of Ann Arbor and Detroit associates and had been working on the development of a new type of hair dryer at the time of his death. The group expects to continue the project.

Mr. Clarkson was an active member of Beta Theta Pi social fraternity, the Michigan Union, the First Presbyterian Church, the Ann Arbor Golf Club, the Detroit Boat Club, and the Engineering Society of Detroit.

Besides his wife, he is survived by a son, Eugene Stephen, and a daughter, Patricia Jean, both at home.

MONTAGUE W. M. S.

The monthly meeting of the W. M. S. of Montague United Church was held at the home of Mrs. L. A. Johnston on Tuesday evening. The business meeting was dealt with first. The president, Mrs. Leon Johnston, was in charge. Minutes of the previous meeting were read. Roll call was answered by a "Gift of To't articles for Displaced Persons arriving in Canada."

It was decided to have a work evening when heavy quilts would be finished up for the needy at home and abroad. Clean, used clothing was asked for this Box, also Mrs. L. A. Johnston kindly invited the group to her home to do this work.

Forty-two hospital and sick calls were reported. Ten cards and twenty-seven treats were sent to sick and shut-ins and to those who are sorrowing for loved ones who have passed on. A very pretty afghan was finished and ready for the Box.

The Devotional Service was very inspiring and was conducted by Miss Alva Brehaut, she was assisted by several of the members. This was the program celebrating the twenty-fifth Anniversary in the Auxiliary, Mrs. L. A. Johnston and Mrs. M. Reynolds sang a duet at this time. The theme was "Growing With The Years in The Society as a Whole". Miss Brehaut had tried to go back over the years and to see what growth Montague W. M. S. really had made. It was decided that growth had been made but not as much as should have been. There is so much more the society could do—by Prayers and in getting more of the women of the Church interested in Missions. What a wonderful thing it would be if every woman in the Church was a member—if not able to attend the meeting, they could be associate members. This is to be the W. M. S. aim for 1950.

A Missionary was adopted for prayer, Mrs. H. L. MacGregor and Miss Alva Brehaut rendered a duet at this time. The meeting closed with the Mazpah Benediction. Refreshments were then served and Dr. Johnston then entertained the ladies with moving pictures. This was indeed very pleasant and all were hearty in their thanks to the doctor for his kindness.

Gloria's reflections did not interfere with her nimble fingers. Miss Endicott's curt instructions were translated into a letter, softened as much as her secretary dared. The sheet came out of the machine with a brisk whirr.

"Any callers allowed?" A neat movement of wrist and arm turned the letter faced downward on Gloria's desk. "I'm busy."

"With Aunt Harriet mail? I don't believe," Jack observed, "that my dear aunt writes three letters a year which couldn't go out tomorrow or next week as well as today. And it's an absolutely perfect morning for a sail."

"Then you'd better start," she said pointedly. "It's nearly eleven now and I must finish these letters. There—that's a long distance call. Please go."

The telephone whirred insistently. Gloria turned to answer it, and became the absorbed secretary.

"Room Clerk at the Hotel Benham? I am speaking for Miss Harriet Endicott. Will you please reserve—"

She evidently meant to ignore his existence. The young man in the doorway looked plaintive and then amused. For a moment more he lingered and then with a faint shrug of resignation turned down the hall. A few minutes later Gloria heard his clear diminishing whistle from the lawn below.

CHAPTER II

If Frances Payne's affairs were really in the precarious condition that Miss Endicott surmised, no one would have guessed it as she entered the lobby of the Benham, slim poised and perfectly turned out in smart black and silver fox.

Frances had good looks and knew how to make most of them. Impulse had made Frances turn toward the Benham that morning. A glimpse of its imposing facade had reminded her that this was the time when Miss Harriet Endicott usually spent exactly three weeks in town. At least she had always done so in the days when Frances Varden had been a young girl running in and out of Beechwood, and when Miss Harriet once established a custom it could be counted on to endure.

A funny, skiff old thing, Frances reflected, and not any too agreeable to people she didn't like, but Beechwood was lovely, and terrifically respectable and if Jack was home there would be plenty of amusing things to do. Jack simply must be home.

It was this last which had turned impulse into brisk purpose. A bit of personal contact—would be much more helpful in renewing old acquaintance than a note or a telephone call. Miss Harriet had always detested telephones. A very useful instrument for making Pullman reservation or communicating with tradesmen, but socially impossible.

"Miss Endicott has not yet arrived." The clerk at the desk was politely regretful. He volunteered a little more, before the faint light of beautifully curved brows. "We are expecting her, but not until next week. I have just received a telephone call that she will be here on Tuesday. Will you leave a message?"

"No, it's not important." Frances was thoughtful as she turned away, her lids drooping for an instant over a flash of annoyance. The desk clerk had been more enlightening than he knew. There were only four places where Miss Endicott ever went, and the Benham was one of them. She was not here, therefore she must be at Beechwood, for if she were still in the South, where she frequently went for the winter, or in Washington, where she would certainly stop on her way north, she would have made the reservation by letter. And if Miss Endicott was at Beechwood, why, Mrs. Payne asked herself, had no invitation come, or even a suggestion for dear Frances to run out for a visit? Time had been when Miss Harriet had lost no opportunity to throw Dick and Frances together. There was food for some hard thinking in that. It might be because dear Frances was no longer a prospective heiress—though, heaven knew the old Endicott ought to be rich enough herself—or perhaps some wisps of gossip had blown across the ocean about the crowd that she and Dick had run with. Or it might not mean anything on particular.

At the other end of the desk a man lingered, unobtrusively attentive. He turned and looked after her with speculative interest. He knew that slightly arrogant profile and the clipped speech which argued an expensive finishing school and could slide so easily into insolence. A beauty, he reflected, with those brilliant dark eyes, and a temper back of them, too. Streamlined and dressed like a million dollars. The Dick Paynes had always put up a good front and had left a trail of unpaid bills behind them. If the rumors he had heard were true.

He made a quick decision and followed her, taking a short cut to intercept her at the door.

"Mrs. Payne, surely! This is great! I thought you were in London."
