

Taquila, the once Island based band put on their usual show last week. The crowd seemed somewhat laid back during the first set by the group, as if they were a bit down after Harlequin. The band's attitude and choice of Music for the evening was a little out of tune with U.P.E.I.'s pub goers.

The crowd danced to the songs that were danceable but the dance floor was never over-crowded during the second and third sets.

The band recorded on video tape most of their original songs for the use in a forth coming video presentation of their music.

They somewhat have a very inflated opinion of their talent and it is very evident by their mannerism, like beginning almost an hour late. In the future, the Student Union should book bands from 10 - 2 since the bands seem not to want to start until ten o'clock.

The Winter Carnival's Main Event got off to a rocking start last Wednesday night as Harlequin took to the stage.

Most people viewed this as the biggest of the three Main Events at the Barn. And rightly so as Harlequin is one of Canada's most successful recording acts.

The band played all their best known songs of their two albums as well as few unreleased original tunes.

The band was well accer-ted and performed quite well despite the Barn's stage limitations- something which this band would be unaccustomed to.

Trixter, a local Island band from Summerside did a very good job Friday night at the Co-ed, despite the sound problems associated with the Confederation Centre's Ballroom area. This local seven piece band did a large crosssection of music including old rock n' roll, jazz, blues, and easy listening. The evening seemed to be enjoyed by all that attended the Co-ed. The hi-light of the night was the crowning of the Royalty followed by the royal dance. The Ballroom floor was almost always full during the evening and most of the couples had a good evening

Saturday night brought out the creative side of people as the Barn played host to a near capacity crowd of Halloween II patiers. Although the band was lacking in entertainment value, not many seemed to mind as was evident from the steady flow of people to the bar.

A good time was had by all in attendance and especially by those who were all dressed up who contributed to the spirit of the even-

Hi-lights of the evening were the spot dancing and the choosing of the best costume. Winners were rewarded with prizes including free records. Bad weather did not stop people from taking advantage of their last chance to party with Winter Carnival '83 at U.P.E.I.
