

Cold Storage Survey Assistance Is Sought

The provincial government will seek the assistance of a cold storage expert, of the federal department of agriculture to carry out a survey to determine the needs for cold storage facilities in the province, Premier Walter R. Shaw said yesterday.

Both Premier Shaw and Agriculture Minister Andrew MacRae have said that there is a great need for additional cold storage facilities, and the matter is getting immediate attention.

Premier Shaw said that Mr. MacRae is arranging with the federal department of agriculture for the services of a cold storage expert. "As soon as one is available," the premier said, "the survey will begin."

According to Premier Shaw, questions such as size and location of new facilities will be determined. "Existing storage facilities will be examined," he said, "and the survey will take into consideration what future demands for storage space will be."

Only 1 Chair Saved In Fire At Fortune

SOURIS — Only one chair was saved yesterday morning when the fire completely demolished the home of Edward Burke in Fortune.

Mrs. Edwin Burke, the owner's grandmother, was alone in the house when the fire broke out about 1:15. Jackie Aitken, also of Fortune, saw the smoke while passing by on the road, and got Mrs. Burke out of the house safely.

One of the main questions to be decided is whether the new facilities will be operated by the government, or as a private enterprise.

The owner was in Souris at the time.

The fire was believed to have started upstairs, possibly from the fuse. Souris fire department responded to the call, but was too late to save the structure.

It was not known whether the house was covered by insurance.

Shortage Of Fish Curtails Course

SOURIS — The fish cutting and filleting course underway at Usen Fisheries here since Monday was cut short yesterday afternoon due to a shortage of fish for the unexpectedly large enrollment.

With between 10 and 20 expected to take the course, 40 enrolled. Even with the addition of two truckloads from Nova Scotia, there was not enough fish on hand to continue the course.

A large number are also taking another course dealing with the making and repairing of trawl nets which is being conducted at St. Mary's Hall.

Both of these extension courses are given under the auspices of the department of fisheries.

'National Laziness' Seen Disease Of Canadians

We believe that the press in reporting the annual meeting of the Federation this week has done its duty by the organization, and may have, in addition, provided about all the information the public is prepared to digest. For this reason our column this week will reproduce one which appeared recently in a Montreal farm paper — The Family Herald, and credited to a columnist calling himself the Observer. We do not necessarily subscribe to everything in the article, but we do believe that it contains for Canadians a great deal of food for thought.

"How many people do you know who haven't time to read the papers or go to a dance, because they're working themselves to death? How many men would sit home and draw unemployment insurance because odd jobs might yield a dollar or two less a week? How many are dreaming of the killing they will make, in the stock market, selling a new product or getting to know the right people?"

"In my own profession I know writers who have sworn some sort of vow never to write an article for a reasonable rate: they prefer to fly a spot, or sort, in a government bureau where, they claim, they are worked to death but where, if they're lucky, they come up with less finished work at the end of the year than the independent writer turns out in a month."

NATIONAL LAZINESS

"Before you think I am sitting here wallowing in self pity, let me add that I also have my days. Days when I tell myself that I really am entitled to take it easy, that I am worth more, that I am working myself to death in the service of my unappreciative family and my un-caring country. That is because I, too, have caught at least a slight case of the disease that has finally been identified as "national laziness."

"In a recent, blunt address to the Canadian Club of Toronto, the president of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce used that term to explain Canada's "slow and frustrating process of growth." He cited a study showing "Canada has not only the largest number of holidays but also in many activities the shortest working week." We find young people entering the labour market inadequately equipped because they are too lazy to take advantage of our educational opportunities. We find tradesmen doing an inferior job because they are too lazy to improve their professional standards, too lazy to do the work the job demands.

"The survey to which the speaker was referring shows that Canada's stores, factories, mines, mills and offices have been semi-paralyzed by what the Kitchener-Waterloo Record calls "the marathon or frequent coffee break, the half-hearted, half-speed effort, the comelate, leave-early attitude. It's time," says this paper, "we Canadians awake to the fact there is no platinum-paved path to prosperity. It's rocky and uphill all the way, and alas, it involves work."

"My readers can sense an anxiety as I where this national laziness is leading. Of 11 major nations, Canada has been the only one to fall behind in improving productivity. Blessed with raw materials, we have become such lazy workers that we have priced ourselves out of all markets except our own. It is just about cheaper now to buy a new
