

Danish Discovery May Hurt Salmon

HALIFAX (CP)—Possible discovery of the Atlantic salmon feeding grounds by Danish fishermen last year may adversely affect future stocks in Canadian rivers, the vice-president of the Nova Scotia Salmon Anglers' Association said here.

Larry Guptill said the Danes were fishing for cod off the Greenland coast when they accidentally made the strike. The migratory run of young salmon from North American rivers to a common meeting place in the Atlantic has baffled scientists for years.

Mr. Guptill said one report indicated the Danish fishermen took 1,200 tons, which probably amounted to between 500,000 and 1,000,000 salmon.

William O. Morrow, vice-president of National Sea Products Ltd. here, said he didn't know if the feeding grounds had actually been discovered, "but the Danish catch last year was substantially up over previous years. Usually they expect to take about 200 tons."

Mr. Guptill said there was not sufficient information from which to draw conclusions, but he said it might not be long before "irreparable harm had been done to the salmon fishery. They are taking them right out of the pasture, so to speak."

Among fish caught by the Danes were salmon bearing Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec and European tags.

Growing Firm On Prairies Builds Warehouse, Office

By KEN EMMOND
WINNIPEG (CP)—Gamble Macleod Ltd., Winnipeg-based parent of a growing family of western Canadian stores, is to spend $2,500,000 here this summer for an office and warehouse structure.

It will provide 288,000 square feet of warehouse space for Macleod's division and nearly 53,000 square feet of office space for Gamble Macleod and associated companies. Completion is set for November.

Macleods, a department store division, has outgrown a warehouse it built here 13 years ago. The company has 220 retail and authorized dealer stores and warehouses west of the Lakehead.

This is 100 more than it had in 1956, and Macleod sales have increased about 250 per cent since 1956.

Last year the company underwent extensive reorganization of its corporate structure.

CHANGE NAME

The company name of Macleod's Ltd. was changed in July to Gamble Macleod Ltd.

About the same time the company acquired controlling interest in Stedman Bros. Ltd., a Toronto-based variety store firm, with stores mostly in eastern Canada.

And it acquired controlling interest in Clarks Gamble of Canada Ltd., a western discount store chain with chief holdings in Winnipeg.

It acquired these interests from its own parent company, Gamble-Skogmo Inc. of Minneapolis, or the American firm's United States subsidiaries.

Stedman Bros. was renamed Macleod Stedman Ltd. and Macleods became an operating division of that company, along with the Stedman division, of Toronto.

Gamble Macleod also bought from Gamble-Skogmo controlling interest in Growth Acceptance Corp. Ltd., which finances company expansion.

Although Gamble Macleod has been American-owned since 1946, the American parent has permitted the firm to reinvest all its profits in Canadian operations.

Macleods started in Winnipeg in 1917 as a small mailorder house dealing primarily in farm supplies.

Alex. McGregor, advertising vice-president for Macleods Division, said that in recent years the company has been trying to change a public conception of its firm as one of "work gloves and overall and hardware goods."

To do this it was expanding its line of goods and calling its stores "family shopping centres."

Strong Campaign Conducted To Abolish Death Penalty

By STEWART MacLEOD
OTTAWA (CP)—One of the strongest, if quietest, campaigns centred on Parliament Hill in years involved the abolition of capital punishment.

Since Prime Minister Pearson indicated some months ago that the issue would be brought to a head with a "free vote" among members of Parliament, the abolition campaign has brought more mail to the desks of members than anything since the marathon flag fight.

It doesn't all come from one source, although the Canadian Society for the Abolition of the Death Penalty is the most active single organization in the field. Church groups, women's organizations, youth movements, legal societies and assorted other bodies have been spearheading members with their views.

In just about all cases, say members, the campaign is directed at the abolition of the death penalty. The retentionists have been relatively quiet.

Comments by individual MPs indicate that the feelings of the Commons are fairly evenly divided on whether the death penalty should be abolished. Some think the abolitionists are slightly ahead of the retentionists.

FALL DEBATE LIKELY

But with Parliament aiming for a summer recess in either late June or early July, and with several major pieces of legislation due for consideration before this, the death penalty issue has little likelihood of coming up until late September or October.

With an Interparliamentary Union meeting scheduled for the Commons chamber in September, Parliament is not expected to reconvene until late in the month.

Before the House recesses, the present debate on the rules changes must be completed along with the revisions to the Bank Act. Interim supply must also be passed to clear the way for government spending during the holiday months. There are also several minor pieces of legislation to go through.

The capital punishment bill will probably come up soon after the Commons reconvenes. Earlier this week, Robert Temple (L-Hastings South) introduced a private member's bill calling for the abolition of the death penalty. But there was no official indication that this would be used as the vehicle for the vote.

SOME OPPOSE CHANGE

Private member's bills normally are discussed for only one hour at a time and, without unanimous consent, they normally fall to the bottom of the order paper when they have been debated without coming to a vote. Some government sources say it would be difficult to get unanimous consent for a continuous private member's debate on the death penalty, since some members are strongly opposed to a change.

In the light of this, the sources feel it's more likely that another bill will be introduced by the government, allowing for continuous debate until a vote is reached.

The Central African Republic earns nearly $1,000,000 a year from export of elephant tusks.

PASTURE AND HAY THE LOWEST COST FEEDS

Productive hay and pasture crops are the lowest cost source of feed nutrients. High yields will further reduce cost, and lessen the need for purchased feeds.
