Emilio Collection The Most Memorable Showing

By JENNY NICHOLSON

FLORENCE, Italy (Reuters)—Marquis Emilio Pucci, the "king" of Italian boutique whose creations have been beautifying the smarter beaches of the world for the last 10 years, Thursday presented a collection in honor of his fiancée, Baroness Cristina Nannini.

The 20-year-old Cristina bears such a remarkable resemblance to the figure of spring in Botticelli's famous picture Primavera that Emilio based all his clothes for next summer on Botticelli paintings.

His line is basic—simple, soft-fitted chemises for summer colts and classic shirtswaits with fitted belts.

RUFFLED BIKINIS
For the beach he dictates brief ruffled bikinis over which he puts belted shirts with big puffed sleeves and big V-cut collars. Long shorts are his only innovation in cut, reaching to mid-thigh but shaped over the hips to make them more becoming than Bermudas.

The Botticelli motifs made the Emilio collection the most romantic and memorable at the current Florence showings. He took the roses blown on to Botticelli's Venus and scattered them in different colors, all over summer dresses.

On scarves and shirts he reproduced the scene through the window in The Annunciation and framed it in the pavilion from The Nativity.

Emilio said: "I think we are something from the era of the confusion of sexes when boys look like girls and girls like boys. I predict a return to the Renaissance when women were truly women."

SEAL AND LAMB

BY VERA WINSTON

IT MAY seem late in the season to be noting new fur coat ideas, but many a woman is inspired to treat herself to one of these new furry fashions at this time. This Empire coat is a combination of Alaska seal and Persian lamb. The top is of seal, the skirt of lamb. Heavy milliner's satin makes a narrow sewn-on belt with a tailored front bow. A few gathers at either side lend movement to the skirt.

Shorter And Fuller Skirts

By JENNY NICHOLSON

FLORENCE, Italy (Reuters)—Fashion buyers and journalists from three continents Friday began their migration from Florence, the home of Italian fashions, to Paris, the world's fashion capital.

In the last nine days they have seen more than 2,000 models presented by 44 Italian high fashion and boutique designers in Rome and Florence.

A new line emerged—shorter, fuller skirts with the waist shifted a little higher than at the natural line. But it awaits Paris' endorsement next week.

For many years the Italians have correctly predicted the line that Paris dictated, so it may be that in the spring and summer women will be wearing the clothes which seem unexciting after past seasons of sacks and empire lines.

The single most important feature, used by every Italian designer, was the Japanese obisash.

The new materials were all architecturally stiff—taffeta, starched cotton, heavy silks, stiffened organza and sacking for play clothes.

There will be a great deal of chalk-white and beige about next spring and summer, and the predominantly new colors will be pale green and bright pink with the shock taken out of it.

EILEEN'S DIARY

Cleared Once By Hand, Now A Bulldozer Takes Over!

There are no lambskin yet on the farms—no "spring" piglets, calves, nor sight of pussy paws, though Mack, exploring Nature's interesting things and nourishings along old mill-road on the far side of the stream, declares "the aren't the same as they were!" They listen no doubt for trickling streamlets of March and a young wind of the th before they can come silken from their wraps.

Only a bit yet, we know, as minutes, nevertheless the twist of morning lifts earlier, and the evening the afterglow lingers. Now the sunsets are beautiful. Kin we think, as we watch sun dip and disappear behind wooded hills, west, and glories colorings spread, to those summer, which summon home wandering sunbeams along over meadows, at-length-leave all in shadows.

Afternoons continue to gather woodsmen to work in the grove. Not every day, of course, for other interests of the ms and farming sometimes bear to claim them. Today in engaging incidental we saw a rise prettily from the kind heaps of brush and other cards, to mingle with the blue
