It became painfully apparent to everyone in Canada and the United States before the institution of the National Policy, that the protective policy was ruining this country.

Mr. Davies said that the policy that would make the people of P. E. Island rich. Sir Richard Cartwright said that the value of all the farm lands in Canada by $10 or $11 per head, and it would increase the value of every horse in Canada $20.

He heard a great deal about Unrestricted Reciprocity on that occasion. Mr. Davies said that was the policy that would make the people of P. E. Island rich.

PREMIER'S ELECTION MANIFESTO.

Appeals to the Electors on the Grand Old Policy.

What He Has to Say Regarding the Manitoba School Question.

OTTAWA, May 6.

The Premier issued his election manifesto yesterday.

Sir Charles Tupper confidently appeals to the electors on the grand old policy of the Liberal Conservative party, which has built up a happy and prosperous nationality.

Referring to the Manitoba School question, he says: "Although shamefully misrepresented by the men who have had a purpose to serve in doing so, or who have been misled by a misapprehension of the real merits of this question, the fact is recognized that the Government has taken a clear and definite stand on the constitutional aspect of the matter."

"Although shamefully misrepresented by the men who have had a purpose to serve in doing so, or who have been misled by a misapprehension of the real merits of this question, the fact is recognized that the Government has taken a clear and definite stand on the constitutional aspect of the matter."

FOUND ON THE TRAINS.

A MAN WHO FOR FIFTEEN YEARS HAS BEEN PICKING UP THINGS.

A Few Items From the Notebook of Charlie—People Who Forget Portable Property—Umbrellas Head the List of Forgotten Belongings.

Whenever during the daytime a New York, New Haven and Hartford train rolls into the Grand Central depot a stoop shouldered, little man, with keen gray eyes and a beard that doesn't grow with sufficient luxuriance to require frequent trimming, strolls down to the end of the platform. When the train stops and while the most laggard of the passengers are still leisurely alighting, he hovers nimbly on the rear platform of the last car and proceeds to literally "go through" the train. Sometimes a much excited passenger who has suddenly recollected that he has forgotten something rushes madly back into the train and discovers his portable property in the hands of the little man. Then, if he is of suspicious disposition, he glares and scowls at the little man, and sometimes pounces upon him and indignantly demands to know what he is doing with "that."

"That" is a never-fading umbrella, the little man's face and he mildly explains that he is employed by the company to search incoming trains for articles left behind by passengers, which he conveys to the lost property room, where the owners can always get possession of them again by furnishing presumptive evidence that the things belong to them.

When Charlie—that is what the other employes about the depot call him, although he has another name which appears on the payroll of the company—first began this work, his beard wasn't tinged with gray, and he wasn't a bit stoop shouldered. That was 15 years ago. All these years, from 6:30 in the morning until 6:30 at night each day, he has been picking up things that other passengers have forgotten to take with them when they left the train.

It would make any man stoop shouldered to be continually looking for things that long. But his eyes are as keen as ever, and his honesty is still proof against all temptations. If that were not the case, he could have retired with a snug little capital. From the pocket-books and purses and "wads" that he has found while pursuing his unique occupation, he could have slipped enough into his own pocket to render him quite independent.

There are no blanks in his daily records. Never a day goes by that he doesn't find something that somebody has forgotten. He picks up things that are left on Sundays than on any other days, because on Sundays travel is comparatively light, and passengers are apt to be less preoccupied with business cares and therefore not so likely to forget things. On some days he will discover quite a number of the incoming trains is quite a formidable one.

This, for instance, is what he turned into the lost property room on Aug. 17: Thirteen umbrellas, two rings (one plain gold and one with diamonds), one watch, one package of legal papers, one satchel, one lady's jacket, one Derby hat, one valise, one cape, one cane, one package of underwear, one mackintosh and one pocketbook.

Seven umbrellas, one parasol, one straw overcoat, one pair of shoes, one package containing a suit of clothes, one pack of spectacles, one purse, one flask of whiskey and one smelling bottle.

Charlie has tried his own way to the lost property room, they are labeled with the date on which they are found and the number of the train. Nearly all the articles that have any intrinsic value are redeemed. The rest are simply stored away for the gnawing tooth of time to prey upon.

Charlie is of the opinion, and surely he may be regarded as an expert on the subject, that everybody is liable to forget something at some time or other. "Unless you are the article that is most frequently left behind on the train by travelers, the man who could devise an infallible system by which the owner of an umbrella would always be sure to remember it would reap a fortune.
