Countess Is Guest Of Guides At Doe Lake Camp

DOE LAKE, Ont. (CP)—Countess Estelle Bernadotte of Sweden, guest of honor at the World Girl Guide Centenary camp near Huntsville in Muskoka, is having a good time on her 12-day holiday of "roughing it."

An enthusiastic do-it-yourself fan, the American-born countess says tent life and outdoor living is her favorite hobby. She was a child in Pleasantville, N.J., when she was given the Indian name of "Paki" by a Blackfoot tribe there as a token of friendship for the white girl.

In 1928 she married Count Folke Bernadotte, a nephew of King Gustaf V of Sweden. Her husband was killed in 1949 while acting as a United Nations mediator between the Arabs and Jews in the Middle East.

WORLD CHAIRMAN
Later she became president of the central council of the girl guides of Sweden, and she still holds this position, as well as being chairman of the world committee of girl guides and girl scouts.

During her stay at camp the countess is emphasizing "how alike nations are."

"Through guiding I've found that it takes just as long for a quart of milk to sour in Sweden as it does in Ceylon," she said.

One of the most popular tents on the 350-acre encampment is the exhibition tent of Canadiana. It was prepared and loaned to the guides by the Royal Ontario Museum. A staff member from the museum is on hand to explain to the overseas girls something of Canadian culture and heritage.

Pretty Peggy O'Hara of Saskatoon, Sask., said "the most striking thing about the international guides is how much they know about Canadian history and our way of life."

A patrol from Suriname are the "hits" of the camp with their "calypso" songs, along with three musical gals from Jackson, Miss., who sport western cowboy hats to the delight of the international guides.

These are just a few of the 1,600 girl guides from 46 nations who are sharing each day's experiences.

ELLEN'S DIARY

He Would Soon Know If They Weren't Mushrooms!

While we may not very well don seven league boots to make far excursions these days, we can enjoy outings along the farm.

Does a yearning to pick raspberries possess one? Then your grassy meadows and woodsy paths in which little spruces and bracken grow, or treading the green aisles of maple sanctuaries we may reach the spicily bushland where the canes now tangle.

Would we search for mushrooms? An old wagon-trail we may wander gathering the tasteful wonders, being careful in our selection.

"No, I won't have any more — I've had plenty" a visitor of last Sunday said settling back in his chair, when James insisted he partake of more dinner. "I've been eating mushrooms and I wasn't to say hungry."

"Mushrooms!" James always a little concerned at the name exclaimed. "Uncooked!" we added. "Yes," he nodded. "Picked them up down along the dam, on my way here."

James looked worried. "Are you sure they were mushrooms?" he asked. "Perhaps they were toadstools? . . . the deadly kind folks used in the long ago to kill house-flies. Put them on a plate and soaked them in a mixture of sugar and molasses and water. It would put an end to the flies if they got a sip of it! Maybe you have eaten some of those?"

"No, these were mushrooms" the visitor offered. "At least I thought they were. . . How do you tell them apart?" he questioned, not without interest, now turning to us.

"Mushrooms are shaped like the women's hats of nowadays — you know" we said, shaping them in a gesture. "They're creamy-topped, satiny . . . and pink lined, and have pretty white stems."

"Yes," he nodded, "that's what these were like."

"Well," James advised him, "don't you do the like of that again! Always be sure of any wild stuff you eat. It's better to be sure than sorry."

"What is it the ministers say . . . 'Once to die' our guest chuckled.

"It's all very well to laugh James commented, "but there's no need of a fellow dying before his time comes."

"Perhaps his time's come!" we teased, laughing.

"Whist, Ellen!" James frowned.

"Let's go and see how the foal's doing" the visitor suggested, rising and reaching for his cap. James followed suit.

"How do you feel now?" we overheard James question when they stepped away from the verandah.

"Never felt better in my life," the other laughed happily.

"You're sure now?" James' voice still held a note of concern. The visitor nodded.

"Then," James chuckled, "they must have been mushrooms!"

Today was a wretched day full of summer's woes and smiles. And tonight — it is we think a perfect night for lovers to keep stargazing and plight.

"What are you smiling to yourself about, Ellen?" James in the old armchair puts down his newspaper to query.

"Just remembering that this was such a delectable day!"

"Aye, it was that," he nods. "A great day indeed for the haying."

Until tomorrow — — — Diary — Goodnight. . . .
