NEWS BY THE ENGLISH MAIL.
THE QUEEN'S SPEECH.

More than ordinary interest has attached this year to the speech from the throne on the opening of Parliament, and the document fully bears out the anxiety which it has raised. Hitherto, it has been customary on the eve of the meeting of the Legislature to communicate to the leading morning journals the contents of the speech, so that before it was actually delivered the public were in possession of its principal features. This rule in the present instance has been departed from; but all the caution which appears to have been taken was not sufficient to prevent the spirit of the speech from oozing out through the press. One of the daily papers, not a very strenuous supporter of Lord Palmerston's Government, seems, some how or other, to have anticipated the delivery of the speech, although the great organ of Printing-Houses square was evidently left in the dark.

The tone of the speech is unexceptionable. With respect to the propositions for peace, made through Austria and accepted by Russia, her Majesty speaks in hopeful language, and good resolution in this respect she will not in the slightest degree be relaxed until the terms have been satisfactorily settled. This is the most cheering statement in the document, the one which will do the greatest satisfaction at home and abroad, for the earnestness and decision thus implied will not be lost upon the enemy. Towards the amicable termination of the forthcoming conference this declaration will contribute largely, and the sincerity of the statement is borne out in another part of the speech, where her Majesty, addressing the House of Commons, declares that the estimates will be framed in such a manner as to provide for the exigencies of war, if peace should unfortunately not be concluded. From the language which has recently been employed by the Muscovite organ in the Russian capital, there can be little doubt that the Czar is sincerely anxious for peace, and nothing will strengthen his good resolution in this respect so much as the quiet but most effective way in which this important topic is handled in the Queen of England's speech to the Imperial Parliament. The speech confirms what was previously announced, that the negotiations will be opened in Paris. Reference is made to the treaty with Sweden for preserving the balance of power in the north of Europe, and a treaty of friendship, commerce, and navigation, is declared to have been concluded between this country and the Republic of Chili—the only other foreign topics, irrespective of the war, which are introduced into the document.

The allusions are satisfactory. Many subjects connected with the internal improvements of the country are to occupy the attention of Parliament; amongst these are mentioned a measure for improving the law in the matter of partnerships, and one for bringing the commercial law of Scotland into greater harmony with the law in the other parts of the three kingdoms. We infer from one of the concluding paragraphs in the speech, that the subject of the town dues on shipping frequenting this and other ports of the empire has engaged the attention of the Cabinet, and that a ministerial measure on the subject will be speedily brought forward.

There is one striking omission—all reference to any misunderstanding with America is avoided. This we take to be conclusive that the points at issue are in a fair way of being satisfactorily adjusted, for assuredly, if, as some of the transatlantic journals assert, all diplomatic intercourse between the two countries were soon likely to cease, the circumstance would have found a place in the speech. It is, too, a little remarkable, that the leading journal of Thursday, speculating on the probable contents of the speech, assumed that the American misunderstanding would be one of its primary features. Whether the reason assigned for the omission by Lord Clarendon meets the case we must leave our readers to judge.

A Scotch paper states that the fifth volume of Mr. Macaulay's "History of England" is in the printer's hands.

WOOLWICH ARSENAL.—A very extensive paper mill is now being constructed for the manufacture of cartridges upon an improved principle. Hitherto cartridges have been made from paper, but by the new process they will be manufactured from pulp, and be entirely seamless. The labour required for their production will be infinitely less by the new system. A new building for the manufacture of small arms is to be commenced forthwith, on a site near the east wharf, and plans have been approved for a new foundry for large guns, which is to be built near the new saw mills.

On the 21st the Pope gave his benediction to the lambs which were to be afterwards shorn, in order to furnish wool for the pallium, which Rome sends to each of the new bishops.

There are now in the Southampton Docks eight large war transports waiting government orders, viz., the Orioco, Great Western, Ripon, Candia, Argo, Queen of the south, Calcutta, and Hydaspes. They will convey about 8000 troops.

The Morning Herald announces that the important question of peacages for life will next week form the subject of a warm debate in the House of Lords, and it adds that, with the exception of the Lord Chancellor, all the law lords are of opinion that the creation of life peacages is unconstitutional.

The Post's Paris correspondent says—"That in all probability Paris will be fixed upon for the Congress, as the Emperor would be so present at hand, and Lord Palmerston could attend personally, thus creating confidence in France and England."

France was never better prepared for war, or more determined not to suspend hostilities until the object of the struggle are fully ensured, whilst the utmost accord continues between the cabinets of London and Paris.

The typhus fever is committing great ravages at Vienna, as many as 12,000 cases having occurred.
