Thoughts For Our Time

with each day of practicing this love of one another, which is the way we demonstrate genuine love for God. It must begin at home, among those with whom, sometimes we are not too thoughtful. It must extend to each one with whom we come in contact through the day, the streetcar man, the paper-boy, the office clerks, the waitress in the restaurant. Would it not be like heaven on earth, if each one of us were to determine at the dawn of each day to be as kind as possible to everyone during the day. Why, I'm sure it could transform the world overnight.

Love of one's neighbor cannot last unless it is based on the love of God. It is not primarily for his good qualities that we love our neighbor, because these in some people are a little obscure. Rather it is by loving our neighbor in God, and on account of God, that our love can endure. For he was created by God, has been redeemed by the Incarnate God, and is every moment beloved by God. For these reasons it is our duty to love him. For some day we will stand before God in judgement, and be weighed not for our wealth, but for our love. "In the evening of life," says St. John of the Cross "you will be judged on love."

That Body Of Yours

ation of the National Association for Mental Health and the National Institute of Mental Health, United States Department of Health.

Our first thought, naturally, is the former condition of the mentally ill, treated like animals because they were supposed to have an evil spirit within them.

Notwithstanding that the gates of our mental hospitals are left open and the traffic is two-way (for every 10 patients entering, 7 come out cured and are no longer in need of mental care), our mental hospitals are understaffed for physicians, nurses and orderlies.

In addition to curing this large percentage of the mentally ill, children who are mentally deficient (children who never grow up), often improve so much under treatment that they are able to take jobs that give them a living. Today all but 2 per cent of hospitalized mental patients are in public mental hospitals.

We learn further from this booklet that, "more beds and more trained persons for care and treatment of the mentally ill mark only part of the need. Even greater hope lies in a wider application of some of the measures that are curing patients and reducing the population of the hospitals. There are such experiments as the day care programs in some cities (Montreal, Canada; Topeka, Kansas) where patients spend the day hours in the hospital environment, receive all necessary treatment, and return to their homes at night." Some patients are placed in foster homes.

In addition to the above, early cases attend outdoor clinics, for the mentally ill just as other patients attend the same hospital for clinics in arthritis or other ailments. Thus, what are called psychiatric clinics are really "first aid" stations and clearing houses for the mentally disturbed. These mental clinics screen out early cases that, left untreated, would greatly increase the populations of mental hospitals already overcrowded and understaffed.

E. Smallman and Mrs. Roy Johnston. Assisting in serving were Mrs. Ronald Hutchinson, Mrs. Creelman MacArthur, Miss Marion MacMurdo, Mrs. R. Haggerty, Miss Mary Silliphant, Mrs. Ralph Emery and Miss Mary Hogan.

to come in to get a new hat for "Sunday!" She had been waiting every day for the last two weeks for a break in the farm-work so as to get to town and now was obviously happy in the thought of her anticipated purchase.

"Wasn't it great that it rained this morning!" we chuckled. "Yes," she nodded soberly, then on another thought broke into a merry laugh: "I bet you wouldn't let James hear you say that!" she said.

Highlights of this week? - many there were: Hair-dos, silver, nay, a golden shower, the fullness of harvest-days on the farm-lands; the enchantment of a harvest-moon above the night-hills; and by no means the least of these the charm of Autumn artistry commencing now to be spread about. Increasingly beautiful our vales and hills will become. Why? Sometimes the question comes to mind.

"The oaks and maples could have been So made that in the Fall. Their leaves turned merely dingy brown. With no bright hues at all.

The trees could burgeon, drop their leaves— Leaves moulder back to dust. Without this Autumn artistry Of scarlet, gold and rust.

Of painted trees and fields and hills. With blue skies soft above them. The Lord must like things beautiful.
