

S. Davidovitch Addresses
26th National 4 H Club

Mr. Stephen Davidovitch, Assistant Commissioner, Ontario Department of Education, Toronto, was a welcome speaker at the 26th National 4-H Club week held recently in Toronto. Taking as his theme "Leadership in the Bar Community," Mr. Davidovitch pointed out that groups and leadership are bound together, and that the major difference between members is the amount of influence that one member exerts upon others as compared with the total amount of influence that is exerted upon him. Of groups he said, there was reason to suppose "that the major difference in terms of their cohesiveness, productivity and general behaviour patterns, could be attributed in a large measure to the nature of this influence."

He discussed the difference in formal groups, such as military or industrial, in which the influence of the leader is large or organization contrasting. There are also informal groups, such as clubs, which are specified clearly but do not have a specified usage or what might be described as stable, mutual expectations that members have with respect to other members in the group.

Mr. Davidovitch then dealt with decision-making, goal setting and assessment and re-orientation of activities as handled by one or very few people, as against situations in which these functions are widely dispersed among group members, and the effect that size can have upon the way leadership and authority is exercised in a group. There were three recognized ways, he said, by which groups can authorize and influence within a group. These were (1) because of their national officials in the accomplishment of group aims; (2) because of tradition; and (3) because the person upon whom authority is conferred is believed to have especially endowed qualifications.

Decision-making, goal-setting, assignment and coordination of activities as handled by one or very few people, as against situations, in which these functions are widely dispersed among group members was next taken up by the speaker, as well as the effect that size can have on the way leadership and authority is exercised in a group, the basis of the general ideology of the group.

The goals toward which a group is working will have a direct bearing on the way in which leaders and members will relate to each other, he said. He showed the difference between leader and follower and emphasized the importance of membership training.

Finally, considering the problem of why some become leaders and others do not, he said, "There are no definite answers to this question. But there is some reason to believe that both traits and behaviour may be important factors in successful leadership providing the situations are nearly identical."

MARY HAWORTH
Drinking Is Not The Blame

Dear Mary Haworth, I would appreciate your opinion and advice on a subject that probably will be of interest to thousands of wives—the subject of conventions.

Formerly I had no qualms at all about my husband's going to conventions. Then, about two months ago, after a very long and tedious convention in a mid-west city, he remarked that he and a few other men had gone to a nightclub "more rouse than usual," in an outlying district, and watched a type of floor show that I consider immoral.

For me this is an awful thing to married men to do—and very unfair to their wives. My husband says that I make too much of a trivialis. He says there is nothing wrong in a few business men having a look at this kind of night life, and that it "isn't normal" for me to get so upset about it.

Koke-Gill Wedding Held
At St. Mary's Church

A lovely autumn wedding was solemnized at St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church, Montague, on Saturday morning, October 26th, 1957, at nine o'clock, when Rita Frances, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Gill, Montague, became the bride of Bernard Koke, Montague, in a double ring ceremony performed by the Rev. J. W. McCordie, who also celebrated the nuptial mass.

The church was beautifully decorated with multi-colored fall flowers and the guest lists were marked with white satin banners. Mrs. Daniel Coudon was organist for the occasion and the hymns were sung by the children's choir under the direction of Mr. George Boudreau.

The bride was given in marriage by her father and looked lovely in a ballerina length gown of white nylon net over satin, fashioned with a full skirt, fitted bodice and long slender sleeves. She wore a shoulder length veil and carried a nosegay of pink carnations.

Miss Frances Murphy was maid of honor. She wore a ballerina length gown of striped taffeta and net, with matching head-dress, and carried a nosegay of yellow mums.

really, and seeking that kind of association—even though he does nothing wrong. I contend that all the drinking that goes on at conventions could cause a person to misbehave, as he never would otherwise. Don't you agree that too much alcohol will make a normally fine, high principled man lose his inhibitions?

Shouldn't all wives attend these conventions with their husbands, so they won't do these things? I have developed a strong opinion on this. As I have responsibilities at home and cannot go every time. What to do? Thank you, C. R.

WIFE'S REACTION
Dear C. R.: Any sensitive open-hearted wife, who fully identifies herself with her husband, is bound to feel shocked and ineffectually grieved, on learning that he has grativated to the company of ribald women whose time is for hire.

She feels as if the archstone of

Mr. A. A. Fraser, brother-in-law of the bride, was best man and the ushers were Mr. George Boudreau and Mr. Raymond Murphy.

A reception was held at Hillside Inn, following the ceremony, for approximately fifty guests. Receiving as it is the bridal couple was Mrs. A. A. Fraser, sister of the bride. She wore a styled brown two-piece dress with beige accessories and fur cape. The bride's table was centered with a three-tiered wedding cake which was cut in the traditional manner by the bride and groom. The toast to the bride was proposed by Rev. J. W. McCordie and responded to by the groom.

Amid a shower of confetti and the good wishes of their many friends, the young couple left on a honeymoon trip immediately following the reception. For travelling, the bride wore a brown wool suit, beige accessories and fur jacket.

Prior to her marriage, Mrs. Koke was the guest of honor at a miscellaneous shower at the Bison restaurant and was also entertained at the home of Mrs. LeRoy White, and on both occasions was showered with many lovely gifts.

the marriage has fallen, as if the husband has sinned and degraded their conjugal affiliation, in loitering for diversion in a risqué atmosphere, where an evil barrier, que of sex attraction is the theme of activity.

She feels either reduced to nothingness, in the role of love partner; or if the spirit of intimacy and exclusiveness has been completely lost, or as if challenged to compete with a woman in her husband's fancy—when, as and if he tells her of desires that are no excursion into this "side show" of life, to drink with her girls and watch the type of revelry that goes on there.

CARELESS ACTION
Such a loss of your feelings—angry, desolate and confused—when you say vehemently that this is an awful thing for husbands to do, and very unfair to their wives. And that you can't describe your hurt, as you try to follow him spiritually into such a situation—as if, in the sharing, you could somehow heal the rift in subjective relationship that this carelessness has dealt.

And of course there is a rift—in his consciousness, too. That's why he finally got around to rehashing the night spot episode in a fragmentary way. He is trying, maybe unconsciously, to grope his way back to intimacy and intimacy with you, in the wake of a demoralizing experience—a brush with evil that fascinated him at the time, perhaps; but which he feels a need to be cleansed of, in retrospect. Not that he feels wicked, consciously; but rather, that he wants to feel right again, in relation to you—and somehow, this incident stands between. In his conscience, that is.

So there's really no sense in husbands trying to fool themselves that this kind of convention behavior doesn't matter. Certainly it matters. Your own sick reaction proves that. And it is dishonest for husbands to argue that their wife's distress is abnormal—or the trouble factor—when the marriage shows injury as a result of such trifling. Drinking is not to blame. It is more excuse than cause. If wives went along, there'd be less risk involved, no doubt. As for what to do now, my answer is: pray your way out of preoccupation with evil imaginings. For help in this, get such pamphlets as Prayers for All Occasions or Prayers New and Old from the Forward Movement Publications, Cincinnati 2, Ohio. The cost is probably 15 cents per pamphlet, plus postage, M. H.

PIONEER DEAD

WHITCHURCH, England (AP)—Sir Kenneth Crossley, one of Britain's pioneers in the automobile industry, died Friday night at his home, Cromberne Abbey. He was 80. Sir Kenneth, who was chairman of Crossley Motors, had been in ill health for several weeks. In his younger days he was known as a big game hunter and sportsman.

PAPER STRIKE PERSISTS

VANCOUVER (CP)—A strike of British Columbia's 6,000 pulp and paper workers, 12 days old Monday, has cost nearly $9,000,000 in production and wages, and there was no sign yet of any attempt at a settlement. Production loss at the nine pulp and newspaper mills operated by seven companies is estimated at roughly $60,000 a day.
