A TORNADO IN OPERATION. How It Sweeps Madly Along Like a Big Whirling Top.

Have you ever seen a tornado in operation—watched its course from a safe distance and noticed the awful phenomena attending its progress? One sultry Sunday afternoon in June I was standing in front of the Kansas City Central police station chatting with the late Thomas M. Speers, then and for many years chief of police of the western Missouri metropolis. We were grubbing at the intolerable heat, and the chief, who had been a frontiersman in his youth, was assuring all comers that "Death's valley" and the hottest holes in the sunken desert of the far west could not beat it. Suddenly a mysterious gloom came down over the city—a creepy feeling at the roots of the hair. For an instant the sultry calm became more oppressive than ever, and to breathe seemed to require an effort. Then little vagrant currents of air darted hither and yon, apparently with no definite purpose or destination in view. Glancing about, our gaze shortly rested on a yellowish cloud that was crossing the city some 10 or a dozen blocks away. Its form and motion suggested an enormous peg top inclined at a sharp angle, but spinning merrily along. At the distance from which we were observing it its progress seemed slow, but a little calculation afterward showed that it had crossed the entire breadth of the city in a very few minutes.

"Looks like a California waterspout," said Speers. "No; it's an old twister, and there's murder in it." A moment later mounted policemen were galloping up to report a cyclone, telephone calls for ambulances, patrol wagons and help were pouring in, fire alarms were summoning the department for work among the wreckage, and crowds were hurrying to the scene of destruction. The tornado had crossed the city in almost a straight line as if its trail had been surveyed and staked out for it in advance. For almost the entire distance its track was between Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets, and hardly a house in the two or three miles of its spin across the city escaped damage. On the hilltops it made complete wreckage of everything in its path. In the depressions there was much less damage, as it seemed to jump from hill to hill. Brick structures suffered most, some of them, notably one or two churches, being reduced almost to powder. Marvelous as it may seem, there were not more than seven or eight persons killed and perhaps five times as many more or less seriously hurt. The damage to property amounted to hundreds of thousands of dollars. Before the great cloud of dust raised by the terrific beam's work had cleared away the sun was shining, the atmosphere was calm and deliciously cool, and nature smiled as innocently as if tragedy formed no part of the repertory.—Miamiapolis Times.

A SPOOK PHOTOGRAPH.

It Was Easy to Make, but It Puzzled the Experts. A photographer of this city opened a little drawer in his roll top desk and took out a somewhat battered carte de visite of the size and shape popular 25 or 40 years ago. It represented a young man seated at a table, and behind him was the very dimly outlined figure of a woman. The young man wore the costume of the antebellum dandy, and the woman seemed to have a crinoline under her voluminous skirts. She was barely discernible, and the legs of the table could be seen through her dress. "That," said the photographer smiling, "is a good specimen of the 'spirit photographs' which once created such a furore in this country. As you may see by the stamp, it was taken by John U. Gait on Broadway, New York, and, considering the progress of the art in those days, it is a very creditable piece of work from a technical standpoint. The spirit figures, which puzzled scientists and gave rise to all sorts of preposterous theories, is such a palpable trick that it is hard for a modern operator to understand how anybody could have been deceived by it. The plates of that period were very slow, and an exposure of from 10 to 20 seconds was necessary to secure a fairly sharp image. In this picture the woman was evidently given an exposure of about five seconds and the plate laid away in the dark against the arrival of the dupe. When the latter took his place, the camera was uncovered for the full time, and the result you can see before you. The spook picture was made intentionally very dim, so that the face could be recognized for almost anybody, and the whole thing was as easy as rolling off a log. Any modern amateur could do the work with a $5 machine, yet these little cards were eagerly purchased at $20 apiece in gold. The world has certainly moved since then, hasn't it?"—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

SIGNS OF SPRING.

One Swallow Does Not Make a Summer.

A Never-Failing Accompaniment to the Beginning of Warm Weather—Listlessness and Skin Eruptions—Dodd's Kidney Pills the Only Sensible Spring Medicine.

St. John, N. B., March 26—We have been enquiring here lately as to the precise point where winter ceases and spring begins. Some hold that the return of the first robin means that winter is over. But as the first robin often has a very cold time of it, this is disputed. By far the surest sign of spring is the listless feeling that comes over us, often accompanied by skin eruptions of various kinds. This is an unmistakable proof that nature recognizes winter is over. The body is now striving to throw off those heating properties that keep it warm during the cold weather, but which are now unnecessary. For the blood, by the most wise provision of nature, adjusts itself to the seasons. When it is cold it absorbs more fat from the food, for fat makes heat. When the weather is warm, as in summer, it ceases to take fat into itself as the body is kept at its normal temperature without it. But in the spring the blood still contains some of the winter fuel. This should now be extracted by the kidneys. If not, it tries to break through the skin in boils, pimples, etc. This later often happens as the kidneys are seldom in proper order after their hard winter's work. Dodd's Kidney Pills, by acting on the kidneys, whose duty is to filter from the blood all impurities and unnecessary elements, are exactly what is wanted as a spring medicine. In fact, Dodd's Kidney Pills form the only common sense way to go about cooling the blood.
