Dorothy Dix's Column—

In private, and not aired before the children. A child who has different rules of conduct presented from mother and father is greatly handicapped.

DEAR MISS DIX: Four months ago I learned that my 24-year-old unmarried son was having an affair with a married woman, the mother of three children. He has tried breaking off the relationship, but each time she pesters him with telephone calls until he sees her again. She claims she doesn't love her husband, but accepts his support. She refuses to leave him and go to work to support the children. What can I do?

MRS. R. C.
ANSWER: Get in touch with the woman and threaten to tell her husband of her infidelity. Apparently she is more concerned with collecting his pay check and avoiding work than with anything else, and the possibility of having this support taken away will accomplish more than an appeal to her decency. I doubt if this woman will hesitate to make her choice.

DEAR MISS DIX: I have a fine girl friend with whom I am very much in love. A few months ago I was taken ill with tuberculosis, and am now in the hospital. Since I realize that I may be ill for several years, I told the girl to go out with other men, and I would hold her to no promises. She refuses to accept the suggestion, and said she will wait for me if it takes years.

M. G. M.
ANSWER: You can certainly thank God for a wonderful friend. You can be quite sure of her love if she's willing to wait through your long hospitalization. Let's hope it won't be as long as you anticipate.

DEAR MISS DIX: I am a widow with three children, and have been going with a very nice man for two years. The trouble is that he and my oldest boy, who is 15, don't get along. Would marriage under these conditions be wise?

ISABELLE
ANSWER: Depends on why they don't get along! The probabilities are that the difficulties arise from mutual jealousy over you. If that's the case, your marriage would be one continuous battle, with each vying for your attention. A dangerous situation, and one not to be encouraged. Try to create friendliness between the two before you go ahead with marriage.
