THE VILLAGE CONVICT.

A few days later, Dr. Burt was driving in his sleigh with his wife along the Salt Hay Road. It was a clear, crisp, winter forenoon. As they neared Eph's house, he said:

'Mary, suppose I lay siege to the fort this morning. I see a curl of smoke rising from the little shop in the barn. He must be making himself a jimmy or a dark-lantern to break into our vegetable cellar with.'

'Well,' said she, 'I think it would be a good plan; only, you know, you must be very, very careful not to hint, even in the faintest way, at his imprisonment. You mustn't so much as suspect that he has ever been away from the place. People hardly dare speak to him, for fear he will see some reference to his having been in prison, and get angry.'

'You shall see my sly tact,' said her husband, laughing. 'I will be as innocent as a lamb. I will ask him why I have not seen him at the Sabbath-school this winter.'

'You may make fun,' said she, 'but you will end by taking my advice, all the same. Now do be careful what you say.'

'I will,' he replied. 'I will compose my remarks carefully upon the back of an envelope and read them to him, so as to be absolutely sure. I will leave on his mind an impression that I have been in prison, and that he was the judge that tried me.'

He drove in at the open gate, hitched his horse in a warm corner by the kitchen door, and then stopped for a moment to enjoy the view. The situation of the little house, half a mile from any other, was beautiful in summer; but it was bleak enough in winter. In the small front door-yard stood three lofty wind-blown poplars, all heading away from the sea, and between them you could look down the bay or across the salt-marshes, while in the opposite direction were to be seen the roofs and the glittering spires of the village.

'It is social for him here, to say the least,' said the doctor, as he turned and walked alone to the shop. He opened the door and went in. It was a long, low lean-to, such as farmers often furnish for domestic works, with a carpenter's bench a grindstone, and a few simple tools. It was lighted by three square windows above the bench. An air-tight stove, projecting its funnel through a hole in one of the panes, gave out a cheerful crackling.

Eph, in his shirt-sleeves, his hands in his pockets, was standing, his back against the bench, surveying, with something of a mechanic's eye, the frame of one of a boat which was set up on the floor.

He looked up, and colored slightly. The doctor took out a cigarette, lit it, sat down on the bench and smoked, clasping one knee in his hands and eyeing the boat.

'Center-board?' he asked at length. 'Yes,' said Eph. 'Cat-rig?' 'Yes.' 'Going fishing?' 'Yes.' 'Alone?' 'Yes.'

'I was brought up to sail a boat,' said the doctor, 'and I often go fishing in summer, when I get a chance. I shall want to try your boat sometime.'

No reply. 'The timbers are not seasoned, are they? They look like pitch-pine, just out of the woods. Wont they warp?' 'No. Pitch-pine goes right in, green. I s'pose the pitch keeps it, if it's out of the sun.'

'Where did you cut it?' Eph colored a little. 'In my back lot.'

The doctor smoked on calmly, and studied the boat. 'I don't know you,' said Eph, relaxing a little. 'Good reason,' said the doctor. 'I've only been here two years; and after a moment's pause, he added: 'I am the doctor here, now. You've heard of my father, Dr. Burt, of Broad River?'

Eph nodded assent; everybody knew him, all through the country; a fatherly old man, who rode on long journeys at everybody's call, and never sent in his bills.

The visitor had a standing with Eph at once. 'Doctors never pick of folks,' he said to himself,— 'at any rate, not old Burt's son.'

'I used to come here to see your mother,' said the doctor, 'when she was sick. She used to talk a great deal about you, and she wanted me to get acquainted with you, when your time was out.'

Eph started, but said nothing. 'She was a good woman, Aunt Lois,' added the doctor; 'one of the best women I ever saw.'

'I don't want anybody to bother himself on my account,' said Eph. 'I ask no favors.'

'You will have to take favors, though,' said the doctor, 'before the winter is over. You will be careless and get sick; you have been living for a long time entirely in-doors, with regular hours and work and food. Now you are going to live out-of-doors, and get your own meals, irregularly. You didn't have on a thick coat the other night, when I saw you at the store.'

'I haven't got any that's large enough for me,' said Eph, a little less harshly, 'and I got to keep my money for other things.'

'Then look out and wear flannel shirts enough,' said the doctor, 'if you want to be independent. But before I go I want to go into the house. I want my wife to see Aunt Lois's room, and the view from the west windows; and he led the way to the sleigh.

Eph hesitated a moment, and then followed him. 'Mary, this is Ephraim Morse. We are going in to see the Dutch tiles I have told you of.'

She smiled as she held out her mittened hand to Eph, who took it awkwardly.

The Square front room, which had been originally intended for a keeping-room, but had been Aunt Lois's bedroom, looked out from two windows upon the road, and from two upon the rolling, tumbling bay, and the shining sea beyond. A tall clock, with a rocking ship above the face, ticked in the corner. The painted floor with bright rag-mats, the little table with a lacquer work-box, the stiff chairs, and the old-fashioned bedstead, the china ornaments upon the mantel-piece, the picture of 'The Emeline G. in the Harbor of Canton,' were just as they had been when the patient invalid had lain there, looking from her pillow out to sea. In twelve rude tiles set around the open fire-place, the Hebrews were seen in twelve stages of their escape from Egypt. It would appear from this representation that they had not restricted their borrowings to the jewels of their oppressors, but had taken for the journey certain Dutch clothing of the fashion of the seventeenth century. The scenery, too, was much like that about Leyden.

'I think,' said the doctor's wife, 'that the painter was just a little absent-minded when he put in that beer-barrel. And a wharf, by the Red Sea!'

'I wish you would conclude to rig your boat with a new sail,' said the doctor, as he took up the reins, at parting. 'There isn't a boat here that's kept clean, and I should like to hire yours once or twice a week in summer, if you keep her as neat as you do your house. Come in and see me some evening, and we'll talk it over.'

Eph built his boat, and in spite of his evident dislike of visitors, the inside finish and the arrangements of the little cabin were so ingenious and so novel that everybody had to pay him a visit.

True to his plan of being independent, he built in the side of the hill, near his barn, by a little gravelly pond, an iced-house, and, with the hardest labor, filled it, all by himself. With this supply, he would not have to go to the general wharf at Sandy Point to sell his fish, with the other men, but could pack and ship them himself. And he could do better, in this way, he thought, even after paying for teaming them to the cars.

The knowing one's laughed to see that, from asking no advice, he had miscalculated and laid in three times as much as he could use.

'Guess Eph cal'lates ter fish with two lines in each hand and nother in his teeth,' said Mr. Wing. 'He's plannin' out for a great lay of fish.'
