New Year's Eve Frolics Come Costly In Places

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

The New Year arrives in Halifax and Vancouver four hours apart but no matter what hour it's celebrated Canadians will find New Year's Eve fun—and perhaps expensive fun.

How it's celebrated and how much it costs depends on the individual's locale and tastes. In Quebec the holiday is treated as a religious and family festival and Montreal, considered Canada's most boisterous city, closes its bars at 10 p.m. although dining and dancing will continue until much later.

In Newfoundland, New Year's is traditionally a time to visit the premier and other officials who are at home to guests during the day.

But in the Maritimes and west of Montreal it will be an expensive celebration as Canadians rejoice by discardnig the worries and inhibitions collected during 1957.

PRICES UNCHANGED

Prices are generally the same as last year, a Canadian Press survey showed. For those with limited resources $5 will get a gentleman and his girl into a midnight show with money to spare for popcorn, lunch afterwards and a bus ride home.

Big-time spenders can blow $100 without much trouble on dining and dancing, a bottle of imported champagne and generous tips for taxi drivers and other hired help.

There will be many who will stay at home and ignore the whole thing and feel better in body and pocketbook the next day. For them the CBC has scheduled an hour-long variety show on television starting at 11:30 p.m.

$50 PER COUPLE

The most expensive spot in Canada is Le Cabaret, a French restaurant in Toronto which set its tab at $50 a couple. For that price the customers get a five-course dinner featuring Chateaubriand steaks or chicken with champagne sace, after-dinner liqueurs, a floor show, dancing and party favors. Drinks are extra.

Many Canadians are willing to pay for a night on the town. Baby-sitters have been booked for New Year's Eve from as far back as August and there are still customers hoping for last-minute cancellations. Prices average about $1 an hour before midnight, $1.50 an hour after midnight with a four-hour minimum and transportation provided by the customer.

Halifax clubs will admit a couple for $16 but the evening can be more expensive for those who buy liquor. Nearly all establishments have capacity bookings. New Brunswick, which hasn't cocktail lounges or taverns, lists a $6 ceiling for dinner and dancing. Many folk, however, rent hotel rooms where liquor may be consumed. House parties and midnight movies are popular.

This will be the first New Year's Eve in which Manitoba's new cocktail bars and liquor outlets in restaurants and cabarets have been open. The liquor control board said no special rules will govern outlets during the holiday and restaurants and bars will stop selling liquor at midnight and cabarets at 1 a.m. It costs $10 for a reservation at the Fort Gary or Royal Alexandra hotels in Winnipeg.

The start of British Columbia's centennial year will add special sparkle to that province's New Year celebration.

The bells of Vancouver's Holy Rosary Cathedral will ring in the year with a specially composed centennial peal. The first boy and girl born in the city in 1958 will receive education grants, money and gifts worth more than $5,000 each.

Says Television In Great Britain Takes Huge Strides

TORONTO (CP)—Television is taking giant strides in Great Britain under a competitive system that Roy Thomson says is much better than the system in Canada.

The Canadian - born publisher, who went to Scotland four years ago, introduced commercial television to Scotland last Aug. 31. His Scottish Television Limited station at Glasgow has an audience potential of 4,000,000, about 80 per cent of Scotland's population.

Mr. Thomson, 64, lives at Edinburgh where he heads the Scotsman Publications Limited. He returned to Canada last week to spend the holiday season with his son K. R. Thomson, president of the Thomson Newspapers, and to renew acquaintance with his first grandson, now six months old.

In an interview Mr. Thomson had high praise for "the strong, vigorous, two-system" television setup in Great Britain where five commercial stations operate in competition against the non-commercial publicly - owned British Broadcasting Corporation.

PLAN NEW STATIONS

A sixth station, in Wales, is expected to start operations in the new year and additional stations are planned. The commercial stations operate under a government watchdog commission, the Independent Television Authority.

"Independent television is out to out - produce the BBC," Mr. Thomson said. "The BBC, as a result must be reasonably competitive to bring it up to the level of commercial TV and it must give the public what it wants."

"TV is run in a much better way in Great Britain than in Canada," Mr. Thomson said.

Under the Canadian system only one station now is permitted in a city—except in two-language areas—and only CBC stations operate in the major market areas of Halifax, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver. CBC programs are made available to private stations on the CBC network.

Independent stations in Britain use no BBC programs and their own productions are similar in many ways to those seen in Canada and the United States, featuring local talent, variety and quiz programs, plays and British and American movies.

Mr. Thomson's station is on the air 80 hours a week and 8½ hours of that time are devoted to local programs, slightly more than the 15 per cent required by regulation.

LOCAL PROGRAMS LIKED

Mr. Thomson is particularly proud of the fact that two of the top 10 favorites among Scottish viewers are local productions—one a quiz show and the other amateur talent.

One of the most popular Scottish programs is The One O'clock Gang, a noon - day variety show inspired by the old Happy Gang show of Canadian radio.

British TV sets are not yet all equipped to receive both the BBC and commercial programs—about 4,500,000 of the 6,500,000 sets can receive both — but surveys have shown the Scottish station is watched by seven of every 18 TV owners within its range.

Mr. Thomson said British newspapers have been hard hit by television, especially in the advertising field, and a number of papers already have been forced out of business. Mr. Thomson foresaw the time when only large cities would have more than one morning paper.

Radio, too, has lost listeners but this is not an economic problem because there is no commercial radio in Britain.

Pupils Present Fine Concert In Alberton Hall

On the Friday preceding Christmas a large number of Alberton people assembled at the Institute Hall to enjoy a delightful program presented by pupils of the elementary school directed by their music teacher, Mrs. Rogan, assisted by other members of the teaching staff.

Perhaps the most pleasing feature of the concert was that it was entirely in keeping with Christmas. The "Toy Town Parade' and a one act play were on the lighter side, while carols and a nativity scene reminded the audience of the true meaning of Christmas. In between were groups of Children's Christmas songs with small soloists supported by their classmates singing in chorus. The highlight of the evening was the closing number, a beautiful rendition of "O Holy Night" by the girls in Mrs. Profit's room.

Chairman for the evening was Mr. W. W. Currie.

At the close of the program Santa arrived and received a rousing welcome from the girls and boys.
