IDA BAILEY ALLEN

A Mixed Chicken Grill Is Satisfying Entree

"THE FAMOUS London mixed grill was the first grilled combination to be popularized in the United States" observed the Chef. "This consists of flank steak, a split lamb kidney and sliced bacon, grilled (broiled) to the desired doneness. The steak is then seasoned, thin - sliced diagonally, topped with maitre d' butter, and garnished for serving with fired onion or tomato slices and parslied small potatoes.

Individual Portions

"Halibut, fresh tuna or other thick fish - steaks in England are cut in individual portions brushed with lemon juice and oil, salted and peppered, grilled and served garnished with grilled mushrooms and grilled hollowed - out seasoned tomato halves filled with green peas.

"It is here in America with our abundance of broiler-fryers, that Madame Allen and I have created the Mixed Chicken Grill, a complete gourmet entree at a budget - wise price. We prepare this on individual aluminum 11 inch patters which fit into wooden trays for table service. We are proud to feature it in the following menu."

ELLEN'S DIARY

Surviving Faith Shapes Pattern Of Our Lives

By this, another January is gone.

"All in all, when we stop to think of some of the January's past, so snowy and cold" James said of it this evening, "this has been a good month."

Joined by company that had walked up from lane's end, we were chatting together about the hearthfire. We, four in all, talked about so many things. There is no dearth of subjects among farm - folks. We spoke, of course, of the weather, because we must farm by it, of the month, spending towards the end, and the hopes for the February days; of the farming, naturally, with its changed, and its ever-changing ways.

We women talked of the children with their schools, their skating and other interests... of the ill and suffering, and the sorrowing of those we knew who, of late, had been bereaved; of babes we spoke, and of winter - weddings, and of the seasonal sewing, the hooking and quilting and the many, many things so dear to women's hearts.

"Good, yes" our visiting farmer nodded "though fairly cool. When" his smile was a bit troubled "the oldd water - pipe freezes, it's not warm weather we're getting!"

"A water - pipe, or a few water - bowls in the stables!" James added with a chuckle.

"You don't" the visitor commented lighting up his pipe.

"No" James said "I couldn't see that it was doing me any good, so I threw the old pipe away back in the years. Oh, I can still enjoy a cigar, with company smoking, but, as it is, seldom bother".

"What do you think about the hue and cry these times over cigarette smoking?"

"Well, I look at it this way: if as they tell us, they've harmful — and it would seem as if there's little doubt about that, we have only one body to care for, and we should do what we can to keep it fit."

And the peace of week's end, with the cares pretty well rested "for Sunday" was about us, blessing us as we chatted together about the woodfire.

And what shall we remember of the January, by this, gone? Its charm, surely: the clean loveliness of the radiant dawns, the beauty of the winter - sunsets. We think of the fields reaching away up and down the valley, white-spread, and often glistening with the frost-gems. The calms come to mind, the might of blown snowfall — and the serenity of those in which the flakes came down, light as the drift of the winged seeds, that float daintily by on the sweet breath of some wandering autumn - wind.

And what for us lies ahead in the new month now come? That we can only conjecture. Nevertheless we can be sure we shall be weaving a mixture, both the bright threads and the darker ones, into the fabric of our days. Because as we know, "Our lives are woven of the mingled threads

Of golden days, and nights when the stars went out.

While we, the weavers of our destiny,

Bewildered, wonder what it's all about.

Yet understanding not, a faith survives,

And shapes the puzzling pattern of our lives."

Until Monday — —Diary —

Good-night.....

MARY HAWORTH

Meeting Eligable Men Sometimes A Problem

Dear Mary Haworth: The recent letter from a Jewish girl, 25, still living at home, who has trouble meeting eligible Jewish men, recalls my situation of some years ago.

It was by no means identical with hers, however. I was unmarried, but had many friends of both sexes. Yet I was "just a pal, not their gal," to the boys I knew.

So I moved from my parents' home to the Young Women's Hebrew Association in Manhattan. The Young Men's Hebrew Association was located in the same building, with dormitories on separate floors.

Here the men showed more than just a platonic interest in me. I was considering marrying Dave, one of the residents of the "Y" when I went for a family visit. As usual I got together with my friends while there, both pals and gals.

One of my platonic pals drove me back to New York. Thereafter his letters became romantic rather than platonic. And I drove up to New York as often as he could, just to see me. Some weeks later he proposed, but I decided to marry Dave.

We have a good marriage, blessed with a son and daughter, and we live in his home town in the West. At present we are visiting my parents and mother showed me the article mentioned. She said that possibly my experience would help the girl.

I don't offer the YWHA as the cure-all for her wallflower problem. But it is a path to friendship for the friendly. And she might try it before going to Israel, if her heart isn't in the trip that her parents urge. Sincerely,

Dear C.E.: Your idea of the wallflowers living at the "Y" in search of romance nicely supplements my own theory that living across town from her parents — in an apartment of her own; or in an apartment shared with other girls—might multiply her chances of marriage.

She seems emotionally ready to take off for Israel and an interim adventure may be just what she needs, to get her
