a long, long time that mother stood there without moving. They wondered why she was looking so steadily down in the water where there seemed to be nothing to see but brown stones. She was standing with her front feet in the water. Suddenly she moved one big paw. She moved it so swiftly that the cubs didn't really see what she did with it. But a moment later a fish was flopping on the shore, and mother pounced on it and held it down.

Of course, the cubs didn't know it was a fish. They didn't know what it was. They crowded around mother, and stared wonderingly at the fish still flapping its tail.

"What is it?" asked Taddy. "It is what we have come after: it is a fish," replied mother. It wasn't a very big fish. It really wasn't big enough to divide. Right away there was a quarrel. Each wanted the fish. Each tried to get it. When one got hold of it the other would pull it away. Mother paid no attention to them. She went back to watching the water. Before the cubs had settled their quarrel, another fish was flapping on the shore. Then there was one for each and peace followed. Those fish tasted good; they tasted very good indeed. The only trouble was, there wasn't enough of them.

While the cubs were eating the fish, mother had moved on a little way. Just as they started to run after her Taddy Bear happened to look down in the water and there, close to the edge of the shore, was a fish swimming upstream. Just then it appeared to be staying still in one place. Taddy didn't hesitate for a second. He pounced. That is, he jumped, trying to jump on that fish. Of course he didn't succeed. He landed with a great splash in the water, but the fish wasn't there. It was a very wet and very disappointed little bear that waded ashore.

Totty Bear laughed at him. Anyway, he grinned. "Why didn't you catch it?" she taunted.

Mother Bear had seen what had happened. "You will never catch a fish that way," said she. "Watch me, and see how I do it."

Taddy Bear shook himself, and the water flew all over Totty Bear. Then he hurried over to stand right behind mother and see just what she did and how she did it. Presently, that big paw of hers swept another fish onto the shore, and Taddy Bear pounced on it. This was fun! The next time he saw a fish in the water he would do just what mother had done.

A Statement By Dr. J. D. M. Griffin

General Director of the Canadian Mental Health Association

We are on the threshold of an exciting new era in public health, an era which will see the traditional program of sanitation and immunization expanded to include the field of mental and social well-being. Already substantial scientific evidence is at hand to support the immediate implementation of new public health policies and practices designed to insure the development of strong, healthy personalities and prevent poor mental health.

The so-called "rooming-in" plan is one example. This plan, now adopted in many maternity and lying-in hospitals on this continent, provides for new-born babies to remain in the same rooms as their mothers instead of being removed to a central nursery. This single physical re-arrangement of "traditional" hospital practice has more than administrative implications of course. It means that a new emphasis is being placed on the recognition and understanding of the emotional needs of both mother and child for a warmly loving and mutually satisfying feeling of "togetherness".

Such a rooming-in program is only part of a total program of supportive parent education involving physician counselling, nursery procedure, personnel assignment and hospital arrangement. It is only one example of a number of situations and occasions in the growth and development of the child where the importance of opportunities for healthy emotional contact between child and parents can be protected and enhanced. It is a fore-runner of a really effective program of preventive work in mental health.

with the jack, but apparently South was intent on making several heart tricks—in any event, he ducked again in dummy. That was his finish, East took the trick, and his diamond return let West set the contract.

It is clear that South didn't count either his sure winners or his possible losers. At the third trick, when West led the heart deuce, South should have seen that success was guaranteed by putting up the ace if West had the king or if he had led from a short suit. At least four club tricks would be there for the taking, along with four top spades, so South only needed one trick in hearts to round out the contract.

cussion likely will develop on the general international situation; progress towards peace in Korea and how these developments will affect joint Canada-U. S. defence planning in the future.

This will be Mr. St. Laurent's first conference with the U.S. president since Mr. Eisenhower came to Canada on a visit in 1951 as commander of North Atlantic armies.

St. Laurent Will Discuss Problems At Washington

OTTAWA, (CP)—A handful of problems involving relations between Canada and the United States likely will be discussed when Prime Minister St. Laurent visits Washington next week.

The journey has been billed as a "courtesy" visit, but it was indicated Friday that diplomatic affairs will rank high.

It was learned that External Affairs Minister Pearson will accompany the prime minister when he leaves by air next Thursday for a three-day stay with President Eisenhower. J. W. Pickersgill, clerk of the Privy Council and former secretary to the prime minister, also will make the trip.

Talks between Mr. St. Laurent and President Eisenhower will take place in the White House and likely will centre on these issues: 1. The St. Lawrence seaway—stalled because the U. S. has not yet designated an American authority to co-operate with Ontario in developing the power segment of the huge project.

2. American import restrictions—the Canadian Government is deeply concerned over the continuation of U.S. import restrictions on Canadian dairy products and new bills before Congress to boost American tariffs.

3. Joint defence—a general dis-
