And the "Bike" your own will be.

THE COMPOSER OF THAIS

M. JULES MUSSENET IN THE DRAWING ROOMS OF PARIS.

His Vivacity and Versatility—Lionized by the Ladies He Swings from Capital to Capital, and Still Finds Time for High-Class Work.

Massenet, writes a Paris correspondent of the Argonaut, is exactly like his art—a charming, fascinating man of the world. He has the physical type, as well as the moral temperament, of an artist. "Tout Paris" knows this refined face, whose features bears signs of weariness, although his slight figure, full of feminine grace, gives the effect of a person younger than he really is, for the master has lived his 50 summers. His hair, rather thin at present, is worn long and brushed back, showing his ample forehead, full of intelligence; his blue eyes are often languishing, sometimes vivacious, always clear and penetrating; his physiognomy mobile and clever; a smiling mouth under a light blond mustache; the courteous manners of a gentleman, with the coaxing ways of a spoiled child and the coquetry of a pretty woman.

A picture that was much remarked a few years ago at the Salon represented him seated at a piano, on which was some open music, in a splendid drawing-room, surrounded by half a dozen fashionable women who were singing and listening—a lovely flock, of which he was the shepherd. One of the sides of the life of the author of "Roi de Lahore"—and not the least important—was faithfully represented in this painting. In the upper ten to-day there are a number of persons possessing very distinguished amateur, musical talent, especially among the women; and the supreme fashion, the latest style, is to sing or to play contemporaneous music only under the guidance and with the assistance of the composer. The celebrated masters lend themselves with extreme good grace to this coquettish exigency, and Massenet more than any of them. He is amiable, encouraging and flattering. "Charming! delicious! exquisite!" he exclaims, almost swooning with apparent delight when some handsome woman has sung one of his songs. Then the master, whose severity is never really disarmed, adds: "You will please sing it over again," which means: "You did not sing it well at all," and he makes his fair pupil repeat it ten, fifteen, twenty times, without sparing her, until she sings it as he wishes, which always ends by being accomplished, the fashionable Parisian cantatrice possessing a rare intelligence. After which he goes off into ecstacies again, and is overwhelming in thanks and praise, which he more or less sincerely feels. One day one of his fascinating pupils asked him to put his autograph on a score of the "Serenade du Passant," which she had just been siging, and he wrote: "To the Marquise X., the author very much pleased with—himself." These little comedies are so delightful that all Paris sings Massenet, and Massenet forever, and the public naturally follows the steps of the fleur des pois.

This kind of society comedy is practiced with more art of Massenet than by any of his colleagues, and is one element of his success; another is the devoted partizanship of the press. The author of so many beautiful compositions understands his age well, and does not rely on his talent alone for his renown. He is none the less liberal with his smiles and his graces to bearded journalists than he is to the fashionable women, and, now that he has conciliated them by clever advances, he can rely on them to blow the trumpets of renown in his honor. And, then, he has associated his fortunes with those of M. Hartmann, a pastmaster in advertising. Data are sent to the journals, which either commit adroit indiscretion on the opera in rehersal, or else, on the contrary, they guard the secret jealously, announcing the fact according to circumstances which alone decide which trick is the best. They publish beautiful scores of the opera, ornamented with vignettes, printed on the finest paper, and with an artistic cover. No musician is so well-dressed up in Paris as Messenet.

Finally, Massenet is never idle, always traveling from place to place; or else, when he is in Paris, always in society. When he finds the time to compose is a mystery. To-day, for instance, he will direct the rehearsal of an opera in Paris; to-morrow he will go and lead a performance at Bordeaux; two days after he will be at Brussels for a concert, and the week after at Geneva for a festival.

Massenet lives in the Rue General-Foy, near the Church of St. Augustin and the Boulevard Malesherbes, where—a piquant detail—there is not a piano in his apartment. At least, that is his legal domicile. Practically he leaves it at eight o'clock in the morning and does not return until late at night. The surest way to find him, when you wish to see him, is to repair to his editor's—Hartmann—in the Rue Dauuon, where he works every day. That Massenet, leading so irregular a live, can find the quietude necessary for musical composition, is a striking proof of the vivacity of his intelligence.

Doubtless, Mme Massenet would prefer that he should have more need of the calm of home life, in order to work. But it is the destiny of wives of great men to suffer. She married him when he was young, unknown and poor; she has devoted her life to his success, and has her reward in the thought of having done her utmost duty to him and in witnessing his triumph. This is almost always the case. The brilliant and perfumed flower which we call an artist can generally only blossom through the wife's self sacrifice.

Wire Shafts for Steamships.

From a recent published estimate of the strength of the proposed wire shafts for steamships, it appears that in this important respect the most satisfactory result is realized. When made in five sections, with a total length of 100 feet and 15 inches, diameter, the shaft will have 25,000 No. 7 steel wires, each twenty-five feet long, with 50,000 fastenings; and, as each wire and each fastening will sustain a load of 500 pounds without rupture or injury, there is thus exhibited a total inherent strength of some 37,500,000 pounds, or an amount twenty five times greater than the continuous force of an engine of 5,000-horse power, which is indeed a significant showing.

A Stove in Three Hours.

As showing the thorough systematization of stove manufacturers it is asserted that a resident of Sharon, Pa., ordered a stove at a foundry there. The pig iron was melted and cast, the frame put together, polished, set up in the purchaser's house, and a fire started in it at less than three hours from the time he gave the order.

USE SKODA'S DISCOVERY, the great blood and Nerve Remedy.

TALKS ON ASTRONOMY.

The Planet Ceres Which Travels Between Mars and Jupiter.

Mary Proctor writes: If you could take a trip to the sky and travel from planet to planet you would find that there is a very wide gap between the planets Mars and Jupiter, and that in this gap hundreds of small planets or asteroids travel. But it was a long time before astronomers made this discovery, and they often observed this wide gap through their telescopes and wondered if some planet had not traveled there in the days gone by.

At last they began to ask whether there might not be such a planet, and they searched very carefully with their most powerful telescopes. Four and twenty astronomers turned four and twenty telescopes towards different parts of the heavens, and they were determined to find the fugitive planet. They had their charts on which were marked all the stars which had already been discovered, and lists of stars made by other observers. If they saw a star which was not to be found in the charts, or in the lists of stars, they watched the star to see if it moved. If it did not move they would know it was a fixed star that had not yet been observed, and if it moved they knew that it was a planet. But although the astronomers were all very anxious to have the honor of finding the new planet, yet an astronomer named Piazzi, who was not looking for it at all, made the discovery by accident.

He was looking at a certain part of the heavens where he had noticed a small star which was not marked on the charts. Next evening, when he turned his telescope towards the same star, he found that it had moved away from its former place. He watched the star for several nights and found that it was still traveling along just as a planet would. He had first seen the star on New Year's Day, 1801 (the first day that is, of the present century), and he followed it on its course until Feb. 11, when he fell dangerously ill, and he could not watch it any longer. He had written to the astronomers who were watching for the new planet, and told them about his discovery, but though he had sent off his letters on Jan. 24 they were not received until the end of March, for in those days letters traveled much more slowly than at present. The planet by this time had become lost to sight in the sun's light and the astronomers scarcely knew where to look for it, as Piazzi had not observed it long enough to notice on what path it was traveling. But fortunately a very skilful mathematician named Gauss, by careful study, was able to calculate where the planet would be when it came to view again, and again on Dec. 31—a year from its first discovery—it was found again. Piazzi called it Ceres.

Now this small planet was found to travel just where the astronomers had looked for the new planet, that is, between the paths of Mars and Jupiter. It was a very tiny body compared with even the least of the planets before known; but still it was a planet, and the astronomers were only too pleased to make the little wanderer welcome. They were rather surprised at this tiny planet traveling by itself in lonely grandeur round the sun, but they were still more surprised when they found that it was anything but lonely, for now no less than three hundred asteroids have been discovered traveling along in the same direction.

A Story With a Moral.

Politeness means much. Yesterday I saw two collisions. A cable car was humming up Broadway and collided with an express wagon at Tenth street. "D—— your eyes!" yelled the driver. "D—— your own eyes!" answered the gripman, after which the air was blue with profanities and vulgarities, which ought to have resulted in some head punching, and probably would had it not been for the interference of a policeman, who, oddly enough, turned up at the right time. After that everybody went along, out of temper, cross, red-faced and ruffled. Not long after that a hack was rumbling along Fourteenth street and nearly upset a light wagon, in which two young sports were speeding. The pole of the hack caught between the spokes of the wagon wheel, and would have caused considerable damage, but the quick eye of one of the young men saw the danger. "Ah, there, Johnnie," said he good-naturedly, "look out, old man, or you'll break your stick." The hackman answered in the same vein, and away they went, laughing, each about his own affairs. Yes, molasses is better than vinegar, and politeness is the grease of the human axle.—New York Recorder.

The Soldiers of the Sun.

Along the margin of the world
They march with their bright banners furled,
Until, in line of battle drawn,
They reach the boundaries of dawn.

They cross the seas and rivers deep,
They climb the mountains high and steep,
And hurry on until in sight
Of their black enemy—the Night.

Then madly rush into the fray
These armies of the Night and Day,
Swiftly the shining arrows go,
While bugling Winds their warnings blow.

Strive as He will, the Night is pressed
Farther and farther down the west,
With golden spear and gleeming lance
The cohorts of the Day advance.

Thus, daily, is the battle won
By the brave soldiers of the Sun.
—Frank Dempster Sherman, in Harper's Weekly.

Edibility of Ants.

The formic acid of ants is said to impart to them an agreeable flavor. An entomologist recollects when himself and boy companions relished a "lemonade" of crushed ants mixed with sugar and water; and a correspondent of Insect Life refers to a man who is in the habit of eating large black ants from rotten wood. Another man traced to little red ants a pleasant acid taste of a piece of pie eaten in the dark.

The Force of Habit.

Miss Budd—I don't think, mamma, that Mr. Silvertongue will ever come to the point. I've done everything you suggested; but he is as far from a proposal as ever.

Mrs. Budd—Don't be discouraged, dear. You must remember that Mr. Silvertongue is a member of parliament.

A Queer Thing About Babies.

"It's a queer thing about children—babies," said the proud father. "If I say 'cat' to my boy the nearest he can get to repeating it is 'tat,' but if I make up a word like 'coobjoobie' that youngster can speak it more fluently than I can."—Harper's Bazaar.

Kossuth's Keen Vision.

Louis Kossuth did not like the name by which Faneuil Hall is known. Said he: "I do not like the idea that you call this place 'The cradle of Liberty,' for cradle scents of mortality and liberty is immortal."

THE STRONG POINT about the cures by Hood's Sarsaparilla is that they are permanent. They start from the solid foundation—Pure Blood.

The most palatable preparation of Cod Liver Oil in the world is Miller's Emulsion, and is now being taken by invalids with astonishing success. Miller's is "the kind that cures" coughs, colds, bronchitis and all throat and lung troubles. Every bottle warranted. No oily taste like others. In big bottles, 50c. and $1.00, at druggists.

Scrofula in the Neck—Bunches All Gone Now.

"C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:

"Gentlemen:—I feel that I cannot say enough in favor of Hood's Sarsaparilla. For five years I have been troubled with scrofula in my neck and throat. Several kinds of medicines which I tried did not do me any good, and when I commenced to take Hood's Sarsaparilla there were large bunches on my neck so sore that I could not bear the slightest touch. When I had taken one bottle of this medicine, the soreness had gone, and before I had finished the second the bunches had entirely disappeared." BLANCHE ATWOOD, Sangerville, Maine.

A well-Known PHYSICIAN RECOMMENDED

Skoda's Discovery

for my wife, which she has taken with the most satisfactory results. This led me to try Skoda's German Soap, as I was troubled a great deal with a sensitive face which shaving would irritate.

Skoda's German Soap

has entirely rid me of this trouble. For softening and clearing up the skin one has only to try it to appreciate its superiority over all others.

Skoda's Discovery

makes you eat, it makes you sleep, it makes you well. Medical advice free.
