York Boy May Be Youngest Hereford Breeder In Canada

John Mallett of York must be the Island's youngest breeder of pure bred Hereford cattle and is likely the youngest breeder, at nine years of age, of any pure bred animals in the province, and there are serious suggestions he may even be the youngest in Canada.

Master Mallett was perhaps the most eager attendant at the annual meeting here this week of the Prince Edward Island Hereford Breeders Association, as he sat at a table with his dad, Walter Mallett, and Ivan Kerry, representative of a well known feed company and listened to proceedings.

John purchased the registered Hereford heifer at the sale held recently at Eddie MacRae's farm in Winsloe, and he paid for her with money he earned himself, his mother told this paper.

He fed and raised a bunch of little pigs last year, saved the proceeds and made additional money for doing odd jobs and chores for his grandfather, B.A. Mallett who also lives at York.

John has a twin-sister, Jane, and they look as much alike as is possible for a boy and girl, their mother told The Guardian.

Walter Mallett is a dairyman who has a Holstein herd. Just what will develop with the son is in the future, but his original move has been toward the Hereford breed.

City Pupils To Hear Talk On Centennial

Superintendent of city schools, Dr. Kenneth A. Parker, has arranged that a team of four speakers will visit all city schools during March to explain to the pupils the significance of the Centennial celebrations.

The panel will relate the historic significance of the occasion, the background of planning, the events to be staged, and the part all people, particularly children, will play in it. Members of the panel will be drawn from representatives of the City of Charlottetown, the police department, centennial committee and the Charlottetown board of trade.

All the youngsters will be asked to co-operate in a variety of ways, but particularly in the field of helpfulness to strangers in the city, cheerfulness in answering questions of tourists and helping keep the city clean by preventing littering of streets.

It is hoped at the time of the visit to present the children with their copies of the special Centennial medallion being struck on this 100th anniversary.

Highways Said Still Treacherous

A wet snow last night turned most intersections slippery and driving conditions on most highways were called tricky.

Yesterday morning gravel roads in the eastern part of Queens County and Kings County were almost impassable due to the thin film of ice which accumulated under freezing rain. Paved highways were passable but slippery in places.

School buses in many instances did not try to move on gravelled roads unless they had been sanded. Sanding was fairly general on most of the paved roads.

A plow and sand truck were called out to aid a truck loaded with potatoes which became stuck crossways on the highway near Upper Montague after skidding on an icy patch. Herbert MacDonald and Billy Thompson, both of Montague, were taking the potatoes to Halifax.

The owner of the produce, Eustachuis McCarron, has been shipping about two loads of potatoes to the mainland every week regardless of the road condition.

Charlottetown RCMP reported last night that roads were still treacherous, made so by limited visibility, drifting snow and ice forming under the light snow fall of last evening.
