MR. AND MRS. VERNON MacLEOD

Young Couple Pledge Vows In Double Ring Ceremony

A picturesque winter wedding was solemnized recently when Jeanette Shaw, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Shaw, Martinvale, was united in marriage with Vernon MacLeod, son of Mrs. Gordon MacLeod and the late Mr. MacLeod of Martinvale. Rev. Donald Campbell performed the double ring ceremony.

Sterling MacLeod accompanied the guest soloist, Miss Eleanor Minchin, who sang the selections "O Perfect Love" and "I'll Walk Beside You".

The bride given in marriage by her brother Sterling, was charming in her white floor length gown of nylon sheer over satin. The full skirt with its nylon applique trim fell from a fitted nylon bodice with long, pointed sleeves tapered over the hands. Her fingertip length veil of tulle illusion was held in place by a pearl studded tiara. She carried a bouquet of red carnations with white satin streamers.

Mrs. Wendell Jenkins of Mount Albion, sister of the groom, was maid of honor. She chose for the occasion a becoming gown of blue velvet with matching flowered hat. She carried a nosegay of pink and white carnations. The bridesmaids, Mrs. Junior Hamby and Miss Eleanor Plover were attractively gowned in red and green velvets. With her green gown, Mrs. Hamby wore a matching flowered hat and carried a nosegay of yellow and white carnations, while Miss Plover wore a matching flowered hat with her red gown and carried a nosegay of red and white carnations.

Wendell Jenkins, Mount Albion, was the groomsman and the ushers were Reg MacNeil, and Harry MacDougall.

Due to illness, the brides parties were unable to attend. Their places were taken by Mr. and Mrs. William Minchin, uncle and aunt of the bride. Mrs. Minchin was gowned in a blue wool sheath style dress with magenta accessories. She wore a white carnation corsage. Mrs. MacLeod, mother of the groom, chose a gown of blue wool and broadened satin with white accessories and corsage of white carnations.

Following the ceremony a reception for 30 guests was held at the Hill Side Inn, Montague. The bride's table was centred with a beautiful decorated three-tier wedding cake topped with a miniature bride and groom. Mrs. Campbell proposed a fitting toast to the bride to which the groom most capably responded. A short and amusing address by Chester Pratt was thoroughly enjoyed. Miss Edna Shaw, sister of the bride, was in charge of the guest book.

Following the reception, the happy young couple left on a short honeymoon. For travelling, the bride wore a gold wool sheath with matching accessories and fur jacket. Her corsage was yellow roses.

Prior to their marriage, the young couple, was entertained at a number of showers. Mr. and Mrs. MacLeod will reside in Martinvale where the groom is engaged in farming.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Dawn Light Awakens Us From A Lane Of Dreams

And then all at once this morning we reached the end of our lane of dreams. It had been a delightful excursion. We do not now recall it in detail. Only see again the path we followed. It wound at times shadowed by the light and dark of sunshine, filtered by branches arching greenly above. In the fullness of the summer-sunlight flowers we love, blossomed profusely on every hand. For a distance the plantings conformed to a pattern, but there was we remember an area which was obviously unattended. Here in a lovely confusion of colors plant and shrub grew and bloomed at will. Here we gathered a sprig of rosemary and a white pansy that were we knew symbols of remembrance, for kin and friend gone.

At lane's end, there was a low wall fashioned of sandstone such as the Island pioneers of tern built about their cleared fields, planting beside them hedges of spruce or hawthorn to provide in time, impenetrable barriers for the pasturing stock. The stone-dikes, these were where sun-bathed the wild strawberries caught, and ruby-red grew. We stopped there a moment before turning to retrace our steps and listened to the exquisite birdsong clear and sweet in the silence. It faded away on a last lingering note. And we awakened, to realize then it had been only a dream! And there was the twilight of dawn at the window, and a sound. We listened. It was repeated: the sound of a cow's plaintive low. It came again, pleadingly.

"James," we whispered, "did you hear that? Maybe she has some misery."

"No, it's not that, Ellen," he replied. "Do you think I'd be lying here if it were? It's one of the mothers of that pair of calves we weaned lately. She's a bit..."

"...lonesome?" our mother heart suggested.

MARY HAWORTH

Dance Craze Disturbing To Middle-Aged Woman

Dear Mary Haworth: I am a maiden lady in my early thirties. I am not unattractive and have known temptation.

Recently my young nephews from out-of-town came to visit and I entertained for them and their teen age dates. During the evening they danced the Twist. This was a revelation to me.

I have always been faithful to righteous principles; but I found this dance disturbing. Unaccustomed thoughts flooded my mind. What was this strange urge that I felt I shared with the youngster? Was it normal? Sincerely, —B.P.

Dear B.P.: The Twist, I would say, is a kind of free form dance version of the mating call.

At a craze of the moment, it represents another pause in mankind's long climb from the primordial ooze to the stars.

In dancing the Twist, people are taking a breather from the strenuous task of becoming civilized, lapsing back to the jungle level of making whoopee.

Now, about the strange urge you claim to have shared with the teen agers dancing the Twist — I don't imagine you shared their sensations. Your urge was to be young and vibrantly embraced by life, love and rhythm, no doubt — not oldish, not gray, not rusting away in a vacuum. Meanwhile they were thinking and feeling nothing save a apt identity with their performance. —M.H.

Dear Mary Haworth: I am a salesman. The problem is an office situation involving the sales manager and his pet salesman in the most flagrant case of favoritism that my co-workers and I have ever known.

We don't mind that these two are bosom buddies inside and outside the office. But the unfair parceling — out of voluntary business by the boss to his pet is affecting our ratings. The best leads, the ready business, the actual orders, go to the favorite. Result: lopsided scores in a rigged game.

We other fellows can't go out and sell harder because no honest hard-sell can compete with the volume of voluntary orders routed to the favorite.

We can't go over the sales manager's head; the owners don't care as long as the figures are in the black. Grips would be labeled sour grapes. The boss would interpret an appeal-to-reason as insubordination.

Last year one salesman tried to uncover the problem and office politics being what they are, he was labeled a trouble maker and fired. Morale couldn't be lower. The only solution seems to be: take it or quit. A hard choice. I would appreciate your ideas. —S.G.

Dear S.G.: The resources of democracy are at your disposal in this instance.

If the situation is as you say, and if the gripping salesman are worth their salt, they will band together as a group, and stick together loyally, in making a mass protest to the top brass, about the demoralizing situation in the sales department.

If the outraged sales staff openly takes sides against the sales manager and his pet, and speaks up with one voice in factually reporting the rigged game that kills their initiative, higher management will listen. And your crusading salesmen won't get fired, en masse or individually. If anybody goes, it will be the sales manager.

The man who lost his job last year for trying to air the problem wouldn't have failed if he'd had forthright backing from the rest of you, in taking the lid off. Campaigning for justice as a team, you hold trump cards; as loners, you're licked. —M.H.

IDA, BAILEY ALLEN

Intelligent Food Planning Makes For Balanced Diet

WE JOINED the smart crowd assembled on the grandstand at the Government Cavalry School in Jerez, Spain, to see the display of magnificent Spanish and Arabian full-blooded horses.

Sumptuously caparisoned in singles, doubles, tandems and double tandems, three and four abreast and driven by their trainers in glamorous uniforms, the spirited horses pranced and cavorted around the great sunlit ring, proudly showing off their breeding and prowess.

"These gorgeous creatures must be given a very special diet," I remarked to my Spanish escort.

"I will ascertain their menu, Senora," he offered and left us. In a few minutes he returned.

"The trainers report that the menu depends on the age of the horse," he explained.

"Their ration is carefully balanced and mixed, and among other items includes plenty of pearl barley and oats. But they eat most when they are 3 to 5 years of age."

Humans also eat most through the growing years. They need a balanced ration to enable them to grow and have abundant energy and to meet the requirements of their age and activities.

Right food does not depend on big expenditures of money for luxury items but on intelligent marketing, meal-planning and food-preparation by mothers — the trainers of our children.
