NEWSPAPER CAREER

The Guardian-Patriot offers opportunities for young men and young women to become newspaper reporters here in Charlottetown, to receive the basic training that can lead to adventure and affluence as news editors, columnists, foreign correspondents and sports-writers.

We are interested in persons who sincerely want to follow journalism as a career, with a Grade 12 or university education, dedicated enough to face the sometimes long hours of duty, the hardships and challenges of the period of apprenticeship that leads to the qualifications and experience necessary for the top jobs.

If you are bothered by curiosity but truthful about telling what you find out, if you can express yourself clearly in English and spell it right, if you can peck at a typewriter with one or two fingers at a reasonable speed or will practise then we would like to talk to you.

We will train you and guide your development, a form of education as valid professionally as an university degree.

This is a serious, fulltime engagement. Since we will be making a considerable investment in you in time and money, if you have any plans to go to university now or later, don't bother with us. Contact Wallace Ward, manager, Prince Street, phone 894-8506.
