miss a thing that was going on in the neighborhood. They never had been in just that neighborhood before, so, when they were tired of playing, they did a lot of looking around.

It happened that they saw in a neighboring tree something that they never had seen before. It looked like a sort of gray ball fastened to a branch about halfway up. It was out toward the end of the branch and hung from it.

"What do you suppose that thing is?" asked Taddy Bear.

"I don't know," said Totty Bear. "I've never seen anything like it." "I wonder if it has grown on that branch," said Taddy Bear. "It looks as if it had," said Totty Bear.

The more they looked, the more curious the cubs became.

"If we climb up in that tree and get a little closer, perhaps we can see better," said Taddy Bear.

"I'm sure Mother Bear won't mind as long as we're up in a tree so near that it is almost like being in the same tree," said Totty Bear.

So it was that temptation proved too much for the cubs, and they were scrambling up that tree.

They climbed to the branch from the tip of which hung that big gray ball. Now they were so near it, it seemed more queer than ever. Taddy Bear crept out as far as he could on that branch. It bent and swayed. He hung on. Then all of a sudden, those two small Bears were having the hottest time in all their short lives.
