Dorothy Dix Says—

your marriage, you'd better get the whole affair off your mind and follow your own suggestions for future conduct. Look at it this way: You've nothing to lose by believing your husband and relying on his assurance that this girl meant nothing to him. On the other hand, the sure way to get him out of the house every night is to keep nagging.

DON'T BROOD ABOUT IT

Brooding isn't going to do either you or your baby any good. Stop it! Of course in your physical condition you are bound to magnify all troubles, but you must adopt a more sensible mental attitude or spoil completely what should be for both you and your husband a very happy period.

If you are jealous or suspicious by nature, these faults must — and can be — overcome. You may be left alone many evenings with a new baby. Don't turn each such occasion into a session of worry and doubt over hubby's whereabouts or activities. Suspicion is a growth that spreads and multiplies like a weed. Kill the first faint outcroppings, and the scourge is conquered. Foster it with further doubts and it kills every bit of carefully nurtured love.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: I have two daughters, one single and one married. Recently I remarked to the single one that I had only been in the other daughter's home three times in a year for dinner. She answered that was all I could expect. I guess I'm a little hurt, as I always did so much for the girls. Now all they want is for me to sew for them and never visit for a meal. I guess we older mothers just must take a back seat, give and do, expect nothing and we won't be disappointed. I.F.

ANSWER: A mother should be a welcome guest in a married daughter's home at all times — provided, of course, she isn't a troublemaker. She should be doubly welcome when she does the family sewing, as you do, and helps with the baby tending. A girl who would have any other thought is callous. Your daughters don't realize what an asset they have in a mother who can and will do the odd jobs that accumulate in a family. There's a rare privilege, and one that should certainly be recognized by giving you a warmer welcome to their homes.

DEAR MISS DIX: We are three girls who work in the same office. We are constantly being threatened by a jealous co-worker for talking with her ex-boy friend who also works with us. There is no romance between them now, and to us he is just a friend. Should we stop talking to him or ignore her threats?

THREE PUZZLED GIRLS

ANSWER: Your jealous friend sounds like a complete idiot and certainly should be ignored. If her threats become too annoying, take the matter up with one of your superiors.

DOROTHY DIX cannot reply personally to readers, but will answer problems of general interest through her column.

Cereals and Fruits with Milk Rich Enough to Whip

• Let your family enjoy cereals, fruits and puddings more, "creamed" with Carnation Evaporated Milk. Undiluted Carnation is rich enough to whip. So "poured on" familiar foods, it makes them taste better than ever before.

Why Carnation is So Good, So Many Ways

Carnation is good, whole, cows' milk, evaporated to double richness in all milk's food values. Homogenized and heat refined, for creamy-smoothness and rich flavor. The vitamin D is increased, to help children build normal, healthy bones and teeth.

Use it like cream. Undiluted Carnation is wonderful on cereals and fruit... in coffee... in cream recipes... for whipping.

For cooking or drinking. Restore the water by mixing half Carnation, half water, to equal good whole milk.
