Sought Help For Ethiopia Journey

(By The Canadian Press) LONDON, June 1—A letter from Queen Elizabeth to the Emperor of Ethiopia, written in 1927, has been brought to light. It requests freedom of passage for Laurence Aldersey, a British subject about to undertake "a long and dangerous journey into your territories and regions."

The letter is addressed to "the Most Invincible and Pius King of the Abassens the Mighty Emperor of Aethiopia, the Higher and the Lower."

Elizabeth says she will "take great solace and delight when the renown of your name shall be brought unto us from the fountains of Nile, and from those regions which are situated under the Southern Tropic."

The Queen entrusts Aldersey to "transport unto your Highness a testimony of our loving affection," and adds that whereas "Almighty God hath allotted unto Kings and Princesses, his Vicerogens over the face of the whole earth, their deigned portions and limits to be ruled and administered by them, it will not seem unreasonable, when you shall have intelligence of our loving letters sent so huge a distance over sea and land, even from the farthest Realm of England unto you in Aethiopia."

FRANCE PONDERING GIFT OF INDEPENDENCE AS BALM FOR SYRIA, NEAR EAST SORE SPOT

Move Would Go Far Toward Remedying Betrayal of Lawrence's Followers

By MORRIS GILBERT NEA Service Staff Correspondent

PARIS, June 1—The world may be treated, any day now to the unusual spectacle of France giving something away.

The something is the mandate for Syria which France had held under decree of the League of Nations, since 1920.

To replace this mandate, Syria may get its independence on approximately the same terms which Great Britain was obliged to give the Kingdom of Iraq. These terms were fixed some years ago under a treaty which gave Iraq independence with some restrictions in regard to military aid in defense against foreign intrusion and in safeguarding British interests.

To arrange a similar treaty between France and Syria a delegation of eminent Syrian nationalists is at present in Paris. Most of the members of the delegation were in Syrian jails a few weeks ago. They were released after a fifty-day boycott in Syrian national life which commenced last January.

Unity of Race Proven

The 50-day boycott was similar, but much more effective, this spokesman declared, to the "passive resistance" to British rule in India led a few years ago by Gandhi. The reason it was more effective, according to Syrian opinion, was that the boycott was national-wide, and revealed an extraordinary unity of the race for Syrian independence.

In the meantime, street rioting and armed antagonism of various Arab groups in Syria to French rule were continuing as they have done sporadically since General Gouraud "pacified" the Syrian countryside in 1920.

All these expressions of national sentiment were so convincing that France at last was forced to agree to parity. On the second Sunday in March at 10 o'clock in the morning national life suddenly recommenced again. In mosques and Christian church the world went forth that work should start, the boycott end.

Present talks will be largely successful, from the Syrian point of view, and that they will go back to Damascus with a treaty between two sovereign states.

Thus, the great betrayal worked by the Allies just after the war upon the Arabs of the whole Levant and middle east, from Syria to the Persian Gulf, will be largely remedied, and the promise of Colonel T. E. Lawrence—"Lawrence of Arabia"—redeemed.

For it was on Allied promises to establish an Arab empire that the people of the desert joined the World War, and Lawrence was their spokesman.

The map shows the area for which Syrians seek independence. Below, members of the Syrian delegation, with their president, M. Hachem Ben Hassid, in the center, as they paid a visit to the tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Paris between deliberations with the French on Syrian independence.

Boycott Forced Paris To Give Ear To Plea obliged to; that failing an American mandate they would accept a British mandate; but that they would not accept a French mandate.

It was a French mandate which was presently imposed on them.

Three Failures for France

Since that time, the struggle between France and Syria has had three phases. The first was persuasion by military force. It failed. The second was by organizing a French-controlled constitutional government. It failed, and the parliament was suspended. The third phase is the one now proceeding, produced by the 50-day boycott.

The Syrians today claim independence for the whole territory which the French divided up into five different states. The first is the so-called Lebanon republic of which Beirut is the capital. This the spokesmen of Syria proper are willing to leave independent of themselves, on the assumption that the people of Lebanon will frame their own treaty of independence with France.

All the other Syrian states—Syria proper, with Damascus as capital; the Djebel Druse region in the south; Alauit, on the sea coast and the district of Alexandretta, and Antioch—should be reunited in a Free Syria, they claim.

Pressure to be Relaxed

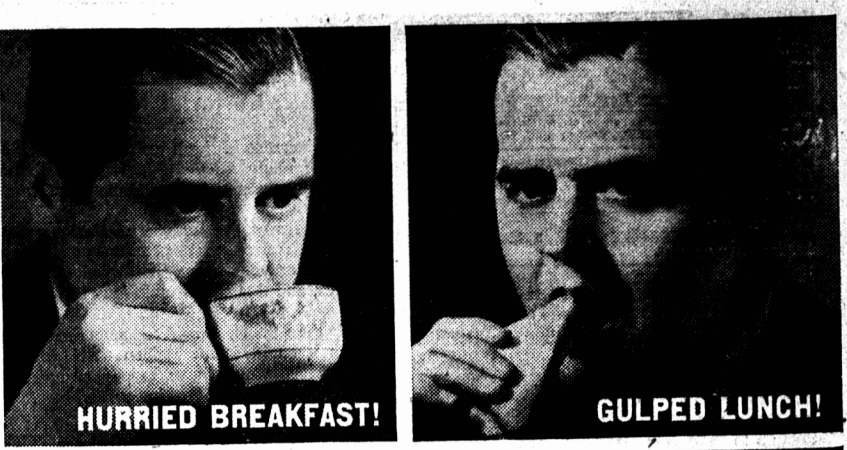

The practical effect of a treaty would be that France would remove its troops except from two or three spots where they could remain as garrisons against possible foreign danger and as instructors of Syrian forces in military affairs. "Syria could still use instructors or counselors in certain elements of finance, military affairs, and economic life."

An American fact-finding commission went to Syria and came back to Geneva with the information that all Syria wanted independence; that they would accept

Hopes Blasted in Victory

The Arabs, fortified by these promises, swept irresistibly up from the south and captured the capital, Damascus, from the Turks. When the war ended, they were faced, not with their Arab empire, but with a document called the Sykes-Picot Treaty, by which Great Britain and France had divided up the middle east between themselves.

REVIVE INTEREST IN TRACK SPORTS

AMHERST, N. S., June 3—Even if Maritime athletes who are casting longing eyes at a berth on Canada's Olympic team are unsuccessful, the trials will do much to revive interest in track and field events in Eastern Canada this summer. One meet has already been held at Amherst and another one is scheduled for the latter part of June. Springhill will hold a senior meet, Dominion Day and New Glasgow will be the scene of the annual firemen's sports two weeks later. Antigonish and Pictou will hold their Highland Games, and Nova Scotia will bid for the Maritime meet, the major one of the year.

Do Not Approve of Salary Scale

TORONTO, June 2—Missionaries of the United Church of Canada in foreign fields declined today to accept the salary scale decided on by the Dominion Board of the Women's Missionary Society at its annual meeting. Salaries had been reduced 15 per cent some time previously, and this year's proposal was that the reduction amount to 10 per cent. In using the 5 per cent restoration, the resolution said it was not in order unless the general maintenance fund be restored so that native workers might participate.

Bermuda news was heard for the first time at an annual meeting in an encouraging report by Mrs. Frith, Hamilton, Bermuda.
