In Memoriam

In loving memory of Vincent Buchanan, Eldon who passed away Oct. 29, 1954. We often sit and think of you. And then of how you died. To think we could not say good-bye before you closed your eyes. THOUGHTS FOR OUR TIME

By His Eminence Cardinal McGuigan (Copyright) VICTORY DOES NOT DESTROY FEAR A wise man has set down as his philosophy of life that the beginning of wisdom is a noble fear—the fear of God. It is even more undeniable that only on a foundation of fear can certain heights of heroism be raised. The true hero, like the true saint, is not a man who lacks fear, but who conquers it. Even his heroism, like all his achievements in life, is a conquest; and that most difficult of all conquests—over himself. Yet this victory does not destroy, but bridges fear; which remains forever within him, a fierce steel champing the bit. The fear of God, which is the beginning of wisdom, is the fear of offending God—the fear of sin. The other fears with which mankind is beset can be driven off by this master fear. David wrote a psalm whose essence is the phrase "my sin is ever against me." The whole psalm might appear to some as a singularly craven god-worshipper, whose chief emotion was fear. Had we no historical account of its writer, internal criticism might suppose him to be a miserable fanatic devoid of manliness. Yet the writer was the Shepherd—King David, his country's liberator, and one of the most courageous and engaging characters of history. There were very few forces in the world able to cast fear into this warrior heart. Yet he feared God nobly, as a warrior should, with a fear begot-
