

A FRENCH DETECTIVE STORY

Between Carcelles Nuilly, on a hot night last August, two sportsmen, returning home from a day's hunt, found a woman lying on the middle of the road. She appeared to be insensible. They transported her to a wayside hostelry, where they discovered her to be a young person of a decidedly charming exterior, elegantly attired in the newest mode. When the combined efforts of everybody about the place had restored her to consciousness, she exhibited great embarrassment, and pleaded pitiably to be permitted to depart. 'But you are not well enough,' expostulated one of the gallant disciples of Nimrod.

'I am, indeed. I assure you I am,' persisted the fair pleader.

'Where do you want to go?'

'To Paris.'

'But why not wait till morning?'

'Because I dare not.'

'You dare not? And why?'

'If my husband discovers that I have been out all night, without an excuse, he will murder me. Ah, monsieur, you little know the torture of a mind chained to a jealous soul which neither appreciates it himself or permits others to!'

This settled it. Monsieur Jacquard was a married man. He was also a most respected one, well known to the Bourse.

'Come to my house,' he said. 'It is really impossible for you to return to Paris alone at this time of night. You shall spend the evening as mine and my wife's guest. To-morrow she shall accompany you and explain all. By-the-by, what is it all? What brought you into the road as we found you?'

There was more embarrassment further hesitation, additional sobbing, and then the unfortunate lady unfolded her tale of horror.

She was the wife of a prosperous lawyer. Her husband, an ogre of sixty, hated, yet was odiously jealous of her. It had been a marriage of convenience. She had sold herself to the golden calf, only to learn that that auriferous animal can kick as hard as any quadruped of vulgar hide and hair. In the three years which had elapsed since she assumed these bonds, which had been paying her such heavy dividends of misery ever since, she had not known a happy hour.

The nearest approach to it had been procured her by a friend of her husband's, a young journalist. Monsieur Gribeau (how appropriate a name for such a monster!) was counsel for the newspaper of which Victor Fallot was editor. Business brought the latter frequently to the lawyer's house. He had met Madame Gribeau. He had loved her, at least she had thought so. As for herself, she had experienced an interest in him. It was not love. It was rather gratitude that he brought a little light into her mournful existence. She trusted him, she confided her troubles to him. In return he sought to comfort her. Strange as it might seem, her husband was not jealous of him, so he was able to take her about among scenes which in a measure distracted her mind from its morbid broodings.

This morning he had proposed to her a visit to some lady friends of his at Courcelles. The journey had been made in an open carriage. They halted by the way at the Brazen Lion to dine, and dusk came on. He made proposals to her at which her soul revolted. She leaped from the carriage and fell insensible. The miscreant drove on, leaving her to the terror of the darkness. The rest Monsieur Jacquard knew.

These affecting confidences melted Monsieur's Jacquard's naturally sympathetic soul. He mingled his pitying tears with those of the unfortunate lady. He then took her to his house in a conveyance, and Madame Jacquard listened to her tale with sobs of commiseration. It was determined that Madame Jacquard should accompany Madame Gribeau home next day, and give Monsieur Gribeau a piece of her mind.

Astonishing Success.

It is the duty of every person who has used Boschee's German Syrup to let its wonderful qualities be known to their friends in curing Consumption, severe Coughs, Croup, Asthma, Pneumonia, and in fact all throat and lung diseases. No person can use it without immediate relief. Three doses will relieve any case, and we consider it the duty of all Druggists to recommend it to the poor dying consumptive, at least to try one bottle, as 40,000 dozen bottles were sold last year, and no one case where it failed was reported. Such a medicine as the German Syrup cannot be too widely known. Ask your Druggist about it. Sample Bottles to try sold at 10 cents. Regular size 75 cents. For sale by all Druggists.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

DEAR SIR,—It is impossible to please some people. The Progress, in an article headed "Defective Mail Arrangements," seems to say that "three round trips" a week between Georgetown and Picton by the steamer "Northern Light" "is not as good work as might be expected." I would ask in the name of common sense, what better or speedier communication for freight or passengers can be expected than a steamer leaving Picton and Georgetown every other day in midwinter. The Progress writer thinks "a trip to and from Picton could easily be made when the weather is fine and the water clear." I suppose he means that the steamer might go from Georgetown to Picton every morning and return the same day. Certainly she could, and doubtless would too if the weather was always fine and the water always clear. But surely he must know that the Straits are never at this season of the year, clear of ice, excepting an occasional opening in some places. Those who have been forwarding and receiving freight ex "Northern Light" during the past four or five weeks, can, and do, appreciate her services. Passengers also find her cabin accommodation a great improvement on the Cape Tormentine route. Business is not so very pressing just now that any one need complain of tri-weekly mails from abroad. As for the detention of winter mails at Charlottetown, that is a matter that concerns the local Postal Department and for which that Department is responsible. But it is very well known that crissing at the Capes for the past few weeks would not be "as regular as in summer," be the weather ever so fine.

Yours truly,

OBITUARY.—Never was sadder news broken to parents than that which was wired to Dugald Campbell, Esq., of North Lake, Lot 47, on the 1st of December from Denver, Col., announcing the premature and unexpected death of his beloved son, Columba. A most promising young man was he; having become, by his tact and industry, an ingenious mechanic, though but 24 years old at the time of his death. The years of his apprenticeship were spent in Souris, after which he lived for three years at Mount Stewart, where his labor was in constant requisition. On account of his extreme youth, and of his high appreciation of his own character, he prudently refrained, for the first few years, from embarking in any very heavy contracts. Conscious, however, of his own ability to perform the work satisfactorily, he undertook, in the summer of 1878, to erect and complete the parochial residence at St. Margaret's, Bear River. Faithfully were the plans and specifications executed, and for many a long year will his name be most honorably associated with that building. Desirous of having a wider field of action than that offered by the Island, during the depression that of late made itself so severely felt in every department, he bade adieu to his friends for a while, so he hoped, and set out for the Great West during the latter part of March last. Two days after his arrival at Denver he found employment which, by his punctual, sober and industrious habits he rendered both permanent and lucrative. Bright, indeed, were the anticipations of his young and sanguine heart, and well-founded seemed the hopes of his future prosperity centered in him by his friends when dread sickness laid its cold hand upon him. An attack of typhoid fever, followed immediately by a relapse, baffled the skill of the first physicians of the city, and eventually triumphed over the devoted attentions of his newly found but faithful friends. Thus did this fresh flower wither and die in this ungenial soil; but let us hope it was transplanted hence to bloom for ever beneath the rays of the Eternal Sun of Justice. He died fortified with the rites of the Church, and there, as here, left behind him a spotless name wherewith to encircle his memory in the hearts of his afflicted relatives and sorrowing friends.—Con.

Constitutional Catarrh Remedy

CURES CATARRH.

Hear what a Reverend Gentleman says of the Constitutional Remedy.

T. J. B. HARDING, Esq., Brockville, Ont.:

DEAR SIR—It is now two years since your "Constitutional Catarrh Remedy" was introduced to me. I have waited this long to see if the cure would remain permanent before doing this, my duty, to you, as at first the happy effects seemed to me to be "too good to be true."

I was afflicted in my head for years before I suspected it to be Catarrh. In reading in your Circular I saw my case described in many particulars. The inward "drop" from the head had become very disagreeable, and a choking sensation often preventing me from lying long, I would feel like smothering and be compelled to sit up in the bed. My health and spirits were seriously affected. When your agent came to Walkertown in August, 1876, I secured three bottles. Before I had used a quarter of the contents of one bottle I found decided relief, and when I had used two bottles and a third, I quit taking it, feeling quite clear of that ailment, and have not used any since until of late I have taken some for a cold in my head. A sense of duty to sufferers from that leathsome disease, Catarrh, prompts me to send you this Certificate, unsolicited, with leave to make what use of it you may see proper. Yours truly,

W. TINDALL, Methodist Minister.
