...and that is where the controversy should be settled. The doctors did not ask the courts to take this action until the strike against the sick had been bitterly launched. Then two individual doctors decided to test the act's validity in this manner: but the harm to their own case had then been done.

Nothing any can do except them from the arbitrary act they themselves took, from the choice of weapons they selected. They compromised a cardinal principle of democracy in a manner beyond defense. The Toronto Globe and Mail—by no means an apologist for CCF government policies—puts the matter bluntly when it says: "They have used the bodies of the sick, when they should have used the courts." A hard saying; but the time has passed for soft sayings of any kind in discussing this lamentable issue.

Listing Britain's Flowers

In these days of rush and bustle, jets and astronauts, it's pleasant to think that in some parts of the world botanists—professional and amateur—are listing the wild flowers that grow in their respective countries. Botanists in Belgium, Holland and Germany have been doing this for a number of years, and the Scandinavian countries in 1950 published an atlas of the wild flowers in their countries. Now comes word of similar activities in the British Isles.

With the extension of building and new methods of agriculture, many of the flowers that were always taken for granted have disappeared entirely from some British districts. The botanists set to work by mapping out the whole British Isles into squares, each of ten kilometres—3,500 squares in all—and then set about getting helpers to comb these districts. It was quite a job.

Eventually the whole area was covered for all seasons of the year, and the data from the various field cards transferred to master cards. The total number of these was well over a million, far too many for manual sorting; so a code system of hole-punching was thought out, and this not only for the sorting, but also for the marking of the information on to the right squares of the map. This mammoth task completed, the Atlas was published in Great Britain this summer.

During a survey such as this, plants thought to be extinct were found after all to be growing in some parts of the country; but the squares are sufficiently large to prevent those people who cannot keep their fingers off any rarity from walking straight to the district and denuding it of, say, Irish Ladies Tresses, or the Military Orchid, or Grass Ploy.

Not Medication

The Chicago water system, serving a vast suburban area as well, is the largest in the world to practice fluoridation. It was therefore no small milestone for the fluoridation cause when the last legal attack on the Chicago practice, pending six years, was finally thrown out of court the other day.

The decision was notable also for its simple, plain and complete disposition of antifluoridation claims. The attackers had argued that the water treatment method, to prevent tooth decay in children, infringed on their rights by exposing them to "medication" against their will.

EDITORIAL NOTE

Mr. Royal Caspey, deputy leader of the Social Credit party, says he wouldn't accept a post in Prime Minister Diefenbaker's cabinet if it were offered to him. Since the Prime Minister has already declared that he has no intention of doing any such thing, this would seem to make it unanimous.

...DON'T END UP THIS WAY

MR. DIEFENBAKER'S PROBLEM

Stern Requirements of Minority Rule

Arthur Blakely in the Montreal Gazette
The fate of the Conservative Government may now rest on Mr. Diefenbaker's ability to adjust temperamentally and tactically to the stern requirements of a minority government position.

Unable to rely on main force, he made abundant use of tricks, devices, and expedients. He was a hocus-pocus. No one used to better advantage such devices as Mr. Diefenbaker. He was a student of Kingian politics, may, nonetheless, find Mr. Diefenbaker a hard act to follow.

More Than A Coincidence

By Harold Morrison, Canadian Press Staff Writer

It may be more than coincidence that U.S. State Secretary Rush hints at the possibility of new Western concessions on a nuclear test treaty which the U.S. has nearly signed at the atmospheric tests it began April 25.

One Man's Achievement

John Christie, who has just died at the age of 80, was an Englishman who did a very unusual thing for his day and age. He was the first person to put an airplane in a car. It was called the Gyrobus. It was a small airplane with a propeller and a motor. It was used to transport people from the airport to the city. It was a very successful experiment.

Water, Fruits Will Help Ease Constipation

By Dr. Theodore R. Van Dellen
Ordinary constipation can be corrected easily by drinking more water and eating bulk to the diet by increasing the intake of fruits and vegetables. The latter will help to stimulate the colon and propel the contents toward the rectum. It is important also to allow time in the morning for stimulation.

Among the fruits and vegetables that supply bulk are figs, prunes, raisins, apples, a praline, wheat, rye, barley, bran, seeds, sprouts, celery, broccoli, tomatoes, squash, asparagus, onions, cucumbers and spinach. Many find a green salad at lunch or dinner satisfactory.

Excessive alcohol may also cause constipation when advised to let nature take its course. But alcohol does not empty daily by fear "poisons" will accumulate and lead to listlessness, headache and other ailments. Careful scientific studies have disproved this possibility. Gas and indigestion are not the usual causes of constipation but it is caused by fermentation and not by toxins.

It is natural for waste to accumulate in the lower bowel when the rectum is not emptied. The rectum is cleaned out with each movement of the bowels. It is more logical to wash out the residue in the way than to resort to laxatives. The laxative is not the best solution. The laxative is not the best solution.

SMOKER'S LUNGS

C.R. writes: My husband is always coughing and wheezing. He is an inveterate cigar smoker but claims this is not to blame. He has been smoking since he was a child. He has been smoking since he was a child. He has been smoking since he was a child.

OUR YESTERDAYS

(From the Guardian Files)
TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO
Inaugurating an 11-day Summer Cruise schedule the Canadian National Steamship Company of Montreal, and yesterday in Charlottetown, North Star, arrived in Charlottetown yesterday with 325 passengers aboard.

CLOSED BOOK

Perhaps the public will never know. But it was apparent all through the setting period that there was much to be learned about the point where officials formerly agreed to reveal the latest radioactivity figures suddenly becoming silent.

TEEN YEARS AGO

(July 14, 1952)
Residents of North River Road and vicinity who were interested in the performance of the Royal St. Lawrence Pipe Band, guests of Mr. and Mrs. E. Earl MacDonell, piped and danced for an hour. They took turns piping and dancing and concluded their performance with a presentation of the Royal St. Lawrence Pipe Band, guests of Mr. and Mrs. E. Earl MacDonell, piped and danced for an hour.

Speaking for Myself

A Case of Bosh, Bunk, Balderdash

Some of the most dangerous nonsense ever peddled in Canada is being poured forth on the strength of Social Credit candidates in last month's federal election. It is important also to allow time in the morning for stimulation.

ECONOMIC LUNACY

The fact that 26 of those members are from Quebec is being described as "particularly ominous" and as indicating that Social Credit has "some special sort of appeal to the French-Canadian."

NO LANGUAGE LINE

And, on point three, Social Credit, over the years, has enjoyed even greater relative success in winning the support of gullible dupes among English-speaking Canadians than it has among French-Canadians.

FOR WHAT IT IS

This will not be accomplished by approaching it in honorific tones and the usual "let's give Social Credit the benefit of the doubt," but by facing it for what it is: an invention of a deluded intellect which has been twisted into a political tool.

REJECTED EVERYWHERE

It is not apparent to me why any politician should be shown to Social Credit theories by sensible men, so long as these two things remain true: 1 - Not a single person on earth, with the exception of a few, as responsible, qualified, and respected in his field, ever has been known to have shown any significant part of the bundle of economic fallacies wrapped up in the Social Credit label.

WASTED SYMPATHY

No, it is the totally untested, totally ridiculous side of Social Credit — the weird, ludicrously original device by the late C.H. Douglas, a Scot, as peddled first in Canada by the late "Bible Bill" Aberhart and most recently by Dr. Van Loosen — it is this stuff of nonsense that needs to be discarded and abolished. In the process, no sympathy need be wasted on those who are appealing in the spirit of Social Credit to the "let's not be cranky to the crackpots" — "Let's not be brutal to the crackpots" — "Let's not be sour to the crackpots."

SELF-HYPNOTIZED

It is doubtful if it is possible to be so deeply hypnotized in condemning Social Credit theories. It does not at all follow that it is possible to be so deeply hypnotized in condemning Social Credit theories. It does not at all follow that it is possible to be so deeply hypnotized in condemning Social Credit theories.
