ELLEN'S DIARY

Memories To Harvest In Warm Holidays Ahead

Saturday brings us the usual end-of-week items. We tidy our rooms... and this morning, come to a veranda, we dropped the rug we were cleaning, to wander down the flower-bed to see only a white iris, our first to blossom of these. And now the bushes bloom in a most interesting and beautiful, reminding of gowns of the now long ago the first of the summer membered young dress, the rose of a sabbath gown, and shades of blue apron. And a humming bird collected sweet dues at a scarlet poppy's door. C. O. W. was seen on the porch, a sunny sheen on her coats, and from the dam below, the water fell in a silver whisper of sound, a musical hum, which was pleasantly soft to the ear.

"And who," Granddaddy here called with a chuckle from his lawn, "does this morning in the sun that has a heart for it who can find her jewels in a flower's cup and ear price?" We painted in blue and red, and "Including earthy folk such as grand-children and great-grandpa's" she laughed.

"And they folks all over!" we agreed. "This is going to be one nice afternoon for the picnic. Let's strike at my heart. I've got the stirring of a brew that heats."

But I keep my own heart free from blight. My small world sure, there is one altar in the universe. Until Tuesday—Diary of Good-night...

The tumult and disorder of the world strike at my heart. I've got the stirring of a brew that heats. But I keep my own heart free from blight. My small world sure, there is one altar in the universe. Until Tuesday—Diary of Good-night...
