Scenes From Ellerslie Fish And Game Meet

Seen from the pond side, the new fisheries research control dam (top right) at Ellerslie will hold back a pond of water 10 feet deep when the water rises to its intended level, which will be almost up to the top of the dam on which the men are standing. The small building (right) provides office and storage space for the three men engaged in the fisheries research program throughout the year.

On the seaward side of the dam and again at a point further up the brook, fish traps enable these men to check on the movement of the different species of fish.

By returning tags to this research station, any fisherman who catches a tagged fish is rendering a service to the men engaged in trying to better the fishing conditions—and the fisherman receives a reward of 10 cents per tag.

The picture at the top left shows two men from the fisheries research station at Ellerslie demonstrating the electrofishing apparatus in a brook near the new fisheries research control dam at Ellerslie at the fish and game field day on Wednesday, October 8th. Wading into a shallow stream a fisheries technician carries an electro-magnetic rod with the semi-oval end just below the surface of the water as seen in the photo.

As if from nowhere, fish, a few of which are seen in the net, were drawn to the rod as soon as current was fed through it, and another man walked nearby with the net scooping up the trout and salmon which are then tagged and returned to the stream without injury.

Mrs. Hilton, an accomplished gunner, has accompanied her husband to P. E. I. for the hunting season each fall for the past six years, and said they greatly enjoyed the hospitality throughout the Island.

In establishing her perfect score Mrs. Hilton was the only woman participant in the shoot, and was in competition with upwards of 50 gunners from U.S.A. and P.E.I. In five successive shots Mrs. Hilton every time brought down the fast flying discs shot from the trap.
