ISLAND ODDS AND ENDS

When scientists produced weed-killing chemical agents a few years ago, agriculturists were seen as the chief beneficiaries. No one thought that one day game fishermen would use the chemicals to improve fishing conditions in rivers, lakes and ponds. But it has happened in many parts of the United States, and is spreading to Canada, possibly to Prince Edward Island. Many a fisherman in the Province has seen some of his favorite ponds gradually become overgrown with weeds and underwater growth as summer speeds their growth. It is not exaggeration to say that the weeds in some ponds cover three-fourths of the water surface and by late July or early August put a crimp in fly-fishing, and take the joy out of many a fishing trip.
