THE PIRATE.

By Sir Walter Scott.

CHAPTER XX.

"The tongues of fools are no reproach," replied Brenda, warmly; "I will never quit my own thoughts of an innocent friend for the gossip of the island, which can put the worst meaning on the most innocent actions."

"Hear but what our friends say," repeated Minna; "hear but the Lady Glowworm; hear but Maddie and Clara Groatsettar."

"If I were to hear Lady Glowworm," said Brenda, steadily, "I should listen to the worst tongue in Zetland; and as for Maddie and Clara Groatsettar, they were both blithe enough to get Mordaunt to sit betwixt them at dinner the day before yesterday, as you might have observed yourself, but that your ear was better engaged."

Your eyes, at least, have been but indifferent engaged, Brenda, retorted the elder sister, "since they were fixed on a young man whom all the world but yourself believes to have talked of us with the most insolent presumption; and even if he be innocently charged, Lady Glowworm says it is unadvised and bold of you even to look in the direction where he sits, knowing it must confirm such reports."

"I will look which way I please," said Brenda, growing still warmer; "Lady Glow-worm shall neither rule my thoughts, nor my words, nor my eyes. I hold Mordaunt Mertoun to be innocent—I will look at him as such—I will speak of him as such; and if I did not speak to him also, and behave to him as usual, it is in obedience to my father, and not for Lady Glowworm and all her neices, had she twenty instead of two, could think, wink, nod or tattle about the matter that concerns them not."

"Alas, Brenda," answered Minna, with calmness, "this vivacity is more than is required for the defence of the character of a mere friend. Beware.
He who ruined Norma's peace for ever, a stranger admitted to her affections against the will of her family."
"He was not a stranger," replied Brenda, with emphasis, "a not only in birth, but in manners. She had not been bred up with him from her youth,—she had not known the gentleness, the frankness of his disposition, but an intimacy of many years. He was indeed a stranger, in character, temper, birth, manners, and morals,—some wandering adventurer, perhaps, whom chance or tempest had thrown upon the islands, and who knew how to mask a false heart with a frank brow. My good sister, take home your own warning. There are other strangers at Burgh-Westra besides this poor Mordaunt Mertoun."

Minna seemed for a moment overwhelmed with the rapidity with which her sister reported her suspicion and her caution. But natural loftiness of disposition enabled her to reply with assumed composure.

"Were I to treat you, Brenda, with the want of confidence you shew towards me, I might reply, that Cleveland is no more to me than Mordaunt was; or than young Swarstar, or Lawrence Ericson, or any of our favorite guests of my father's, now is. But I scorn to deceive you, or to disguise my thoughts. I love Clement Cleveland."

"Do not say so, dearest sister," said Brenda, abandoning at once the air of acrimony with which the conversation had been latterly conducted, and throwing her arms around her sister's neck, with looks, and with a tone, of the most earnest affection,—"do not say so, I implore you! I will renounce Mordaunt Mer-toun,—I will swear never to speak to him again; but do not repeat that you love this Cleveland!"

"And why should I not repeat," said Minna, disengaging herself gently from her sister's grasp "a sentiment in which I glory?
The boldness, the strength and energy, of his character, to which command is natural, and fear unknown,—these very properties, which alarm you for my happiness, are the qualities which ensure it. Remember, Brenda, that when your foot loved the calm smooth sea-beach of the summer sea, mine ever delighted in the surfeit of the precipice, when the waves are in fury."

"And it is even that which I dread," said Brenda; "it is even that adventurous disposition which now is urging you to the brink of a precipice more dangerous than ever was washed by a spring tide. This man, do not frown, I will say no slander of him,—but is he not, even in your own partial judgment, stern and overbearing? accustomed, as you say, to command; but, for that very reason, commanding where he has no right to do so, and leading whom it would most become him to follow? rushing on danger, rather for his own sake, than for any other object? And can you think of being yoked with a spirit so unsettled and stormy, whose life has hitherto been led in scenes of death and peril, and who, even while sitting by your side, cannot disguise his impatience again to engage in them? A lover, methinks, should love his mistress better than his own life; but yours, my dear Minna, loves her less than the pleasure of inflicting death on others."

"And it is even for that I love him," said Minna. "I am a daughter of the old dames of Norway, who could send their lovers to battle with a smile, and slay them, with their own hands, if they returned with dishonor.
My lover must scorn the mockeries by which our degraded race strive for distinction, or must practise them only in sport, and in earnest of nobler dangers. No whale-striking, bird-nesting favorite for me; my lover must be a Sea-king, or what else modern times may give that draws near to that lofty character."

A Donation of $10,000,000.

BARON HIRSCH'S MUNIFICENT GIFT TO HIS CO-RELIGIONISTS IN RUSSIA.

The Pesther Lloyd recently announced that Baron Hirsch had given $20,000,000 to be distributed among the Hebrew communities of Europe and Hebrew charities in proportions corresponding to their necessities. This news was contradicted, and, in point of fact, in this form it was inaccurate. The true version is the following: About three months ago, some days before the departure for Copenhagen of the emperor of Russia, Baron Hirsch sent a letter to the Czar in which he offered a sum of $10,000,000 to found in Russia primary schools for Hebrews and $200,000 to be at the disposal of the Czar for works of charity. The Czar wrote a note on the letter, and requested the Russian minister of the interior to report verbally upon it on his return to Russia. The offer thus remained a dead letter for three months.
During this time those who knew of it asked if Baron Hirsch, justly offended by this delay, would not withdraw his promise, and if such delay did not expose this great and generous idea to the risk of not being realized. These fears are now at an end.
On the return of the Czar he received the verbal report of his minister of the interior on the subject, and signed his acceptance of the gift. The $10,000,000 are to be paid into the Bank of England, and Baron Rothschild and Baron DeWorms, who were appointed trustees, and who will be replaced in case of death, will receive the interest of the sum so deposited. It is estimated that, with its annual interest of about $500,000, it will be possible to open 1,000 schools, receiving 200,000 children, who will thus be rescued from ignorance and bad example.
Never has such a munificent gift been made by a rich man in his lifetime to the destitute.

Discipline the Eye.

A very good way to discipline the mechanical eye is to first measure an inch with the eye, then prove it with a rule, then measure a half inch, then an eighth, and so on, and you will soon be able to discover at a glance the difference between a twelfth and a sixteenth of an inch; then go to three inches, six, twelve, and so on.
Some call this guessing; there is no guess work about it. It is measuring with the eye and mind. Acquire the habit of criticizing for imperfections every piece of work that you see; do everything as nearly as you can without measuring (or spooling it), or as nearly as you can trust the eye with its present training. If you cannot see things mechanically, do not blame the eye for it; it is no more to blame than the mouth is because we cannot read, or the fingers because we can not write. A person may write a very good hand with the eyes closed, the mind, of course, directing the fingers. The eye is necessary, however, to detect imperfections. Every operation in life requires a mechanically trained eye, and we should realize more than we do the great importance of properly training that organ.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain; and the little cherub awakes as "bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhoea, whether arising from teething or other causes. Twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for Mrs.
Winslow's Soothing Syrup, and take no other kind. mar17 sod & wky
