DOROTHY DIX

Seeks Employment

DEAR MISS DIX: I am 29 years old, happily married and have two children. When my son starts school this fall, I'd like very much to go to work but am handicapped by the fact that I have no business experience. Do you think it would be foolish of me to take a business course or to learn a trade?

ANSWER: You would be wise to take some training, and out of the list you suggested, beauty culture would be a particularly good field for you. In time, you could conduct a business in your home, which would eliminate the difficulties of transportation, as well as assuring your presence when the youngsters are home. Typing also provides splendid opportunities for home work; also recommends are dressmaking and cooking—particularly party fare for which there is much demand.

DEAR MISS DIX: My 86-year-old mother is becoming a problem—not because she's dependent but because she's too independent. Five years ago when she was ill, my two sisters and I had her brought up her home and live with us, in turns. We don't expect her to do any work, but she insists on taking over practically all household chores, making beds, doing dishes, etc. If we attempt to do these things ourselves, she gets very peevish and threatens to leave. She has a good income and doesn't lack friends, since there are several widows here. Mother could rent a small house in town. Do you think things would be better if she did?

ANSWER: While fully appreciating the difficulties you're having with Mom, I must confess to a great admiration for the gal. She has a mind of her own and a most effective way of asserting it. By all means let her rent the house. If you and your sisters feel that she won't eat properly, make a point of bringing in some food as needed. Your mother has very devoted daughters, and you have certainly done your utmost to do what's right. That you can't turn mother into a docile old lady isn't your fault; she's made of sterner stuff.

DEAR MISS DIX: When a diamond that had belonged to my fiancé's deceased wife. Now, a year later, my husband's brother-in-law wants the ring, claiming it had been promised to a relative. I feel I have been put in a humiliating position and I think my husband was wrong in giving me the ring.

ANSWER: When uncomfortable situations like this develop, the best thing to do is give in when necessary, then forget the whole matter—bear no grudges. These things arise out of thoughtlessness, nothing worse. Your husband acted in good faith, anticipating no aftermath to his gift, and that someone else came up with a prior claim wasn't his fault. Don't let happiness.

A TYPICALLY THOUGHTLESS PLAY

The play made by declarer at Trick 1 in the following hand was just the thoughtless sort of action that wrecks innumerable contracts.

At the score, particularly, South's opening bid was probably the best selection available, and of course it happened to be a perfect bid for North's holding.

West made his natural opening, the spade queen, and without the slightest hesitation South reached for dummy's king. In a case of this sort the declarer's thought processes are easy to follow—the obviously feels that nothing can be lost by trying to win the trick with the king. The result here, however, was precisely the same as in countless other cases—East smothered the king, and South ended up by losing the spade trick and three hearts.

It is possible, of course, that the lead of a queen in such a situation as this is from holding of A-Q, but the chance that any West past the primer stage is making such a lead is so remote that it can be ignored. South should have realized that he could put the spade king to excellent use at a later stage—not to win a trick but to throw the lead where he wanted it to be—and so he should have played West from dummy at Trick 1. It is true that West then could make South unhappy by shifting to hearts—but what flesh-and-blood West would make that shift? Beyond question or doubt, with no knowledge of the heart situation, West would continue spades, and now South would be on the home stretch. He should again duck in dummy, ruffing in his own hand, draw one round of trumps, cash the club ace and ruff out the queen and six of clubs as well as dummy's club ace and ruff out the queen and six of clubs as well

That Body of Yours

EFFECT OF NOISE ON MAN

I have written several times about the harmful effects of noise and of the helpful work being done by the noise abatement organizations. I do not usually discuss the matter of the damage done by what might be called "necessary" noise because we are all aware that some noises are necessary. Nor do I generally discuss the harmful effects upon the hearing ability of those exposed to noise.

However, I do stress the harm done to the whole nervous system by noisy surroundings. I have mentioned before that careful investigation has revealed the fact that clerical workers lose from 30 to 40 per cent of their working ability if working in a noisy office.

A recent review of a handbook issued by United States Air Force entitled "Handbook of Acoustic Noise Control, Vol. II," by Walter A. Rosenblatt, Kenneth N. Stevens and staff of Bolt, Baranck and Newman is at hand. This book was written for the benefit of all those who have the responsibility of "doing something about noise."

This includes the doctor, the industrial hygienist, the safety engineer, the architect, the economist, the legislator and many others.

The handbook is addressed to an audience such as the above, centering on the planners and engineers and summarizing in effective form and language with the aid of charts, graphs and tables, the present state of knowledge of the biological and psychological effects of noise on man.

Noise affects the body as a whole and, particularly, the nervous system. I have pointed out before that noise attracts our attention even when we think we are not listening to it. By attracting our attention our whole nervous system becomes alert, and this alertness tightens up our nervous system. This keeping at attention, even if we think our attention as being of a casual nature, tenses up the entire muscular system of the body and each tiny nerve of the muscular system comes into use. A body that becomes tense by listening becomes tired sooner than when there is no noise because, as often stated before, tenseness is the forerunner of tiredness or fatigue.

The doctor who is interested in industrial medicine (and the number of industrial physicians seems to be increasing at a very rapid rate) will profit by reading this book as will even the specialist in hearing (the otologist).

The perspective in relation to as dummy's next-to-last spade, then use the spade king as a throw-in card, discarding a heart from the closed hand. East would then be helpless.

Modern Etiquette

By Roberta Lee

Q. If I have issued invitations to an informal affair in my home, and now find it impossible to give this affair, how can I recall my invitations?

A. Either by telephone or by brief note, explaining the circumstances and informing your intended guests that you will get in touch with them at a later date.

Q. Would it be all right for a girl to borrow the wedding dress of a married friend for use at her wedding?

A. If the friend offers the dress to her, it would be all right. But it would be a big breach of etiquette to ask to use the dress.

Q. Do you think it proper for high school girls to wear nail polish?

A. I do not favor the brightly colored or garish tones of polish. Otherwise, there is nothing improper about it.

The Bread Box

It is rather difficult to remove rust from the inside of a bread box, and if this happens, it is advisable to paint it. Two coats of flat white paint should be used with one coat of enamel.

Silver

To polish silver mix equal parts of whiting, ammonia, and alcohol. Apply with a flannel cloth, allow it to dry and then polish with tissue paper.

The Frying Pans

Frying pans can be kept bright and clean by rubbing them with a crust of hard bread. Then wash in a solution of hot water and washing soda.

For Tomorrow

SUNDAY'S horoscope promises a pleasant day. Seek relaxation with friends and loved ones in congenial surroundings.

It is not a day to worry about business matters since, if you will stop and analyze your present situation, you should be aware that things are running smoothly now, so relax and prepare to resume pursuit of your goals in the week ahead.

The afternoon hours are favorable for family matters and making plans for home renovations. In making plans, however, do not figure on large expenditures unless

by an Island Farmer's Wife

"May Day this? Will it, we wonder, bring sunny blue skies in gift? Or the slant of gray silvery showers? Or maybe we shall get a last snowfall to be 'the poor man's fertilizer'?" In any case the Day welcomed so joyously in some lands across the sea will open wider the portals of the season to us, to reveal scenes of rare enchantment within.

"We think of the flowering orchards and woodlands, and trees like brides adorned" along hedgerows; of swallows winging busily about; of fetching dots of building material to add to their earthy dwellings; of pastures once more alive with the strength of their herds and flocks. . . . Supposing we have no flowers to brighten a garden-spot or sill and live in the humblest of these lovelinesses about to make us wealthy indeed.

"I have finished my cleaning," a busy industrious woman reported to us on a recent day. "I got it over with early this year" she smiled "so that I could enjoy better the season. I want to smell the lilacs and the apple blossoms and to gather bouquets of wild pear and cherry-like old Valenciennes lace they are, so creamy and delicate. Usually I'm so busy decorating a room, or 'doing up' my curtains that I have no time to notice them. But this year's going to be different because," she chuckled ruefully, "there's a long time between springs!"

"No one—but two robins," singing their "Cheer-up" song in a white birch of a Great-grandmother's painting awakened Granddaughter from her dreaming one peep of new day. . . . And one morning, blessed event that it was, the children of this place found four shining kit-cats in an aisle of the new barn: three white and one buff, to make one day what Gage reckons will be "good smart mousters."

And one day of this week a little black lamb was born to Jamie's young gift-ewe but only to live a few hours before the strange spark of life dimmed and was gone.

"Perhaps it would only have grown up and died then," Gage a knowing fellow for his years, offered to Jamie. "And that would have been worse. And besides," he smiled, "you couldn't have kept him anyway—he would have to be sold. And that," he said with emphasis "is a day I don't like! Do you remember that day we sold our pet lamb? Poor little fellow."

Yet altogether this has been a gracious week to the folks on this farm—this which now nearing its close bears them off to their rest. Nor is there any valid excuse for us to loiter here, now that bedtime has come.

"The plants are watered, The old clock wound, Walls relax After day-long sound.

The kitchen is clean As kitchen should be; The last to go up Has turned the door key.

See, through the window, On crack and board, The moon, The silver watch of God,

Times the few stars With patient light, Peace to the house, Peace for the night!"

How Can I?

By Anne Ashley

Q. How can I remove mud stains on clothing?

A. Let the stains dry then break the crust and rub lightly to prevent driving the dirt into the material. If there are any remaining marks, rub with a little alcohol.

Q. How can I avoid ruining the wall paper with large picture nails?

A. Because a picture is large does not mean that a large nail is needed to hold it. Thin strong nails can be purchased and the wall paper will not be ruined.

Q. How can I clean white enamel?

A. To make white enamel look like new, rub it well with baking soda, then wash with hot soap-suds.

Morning Smile

A tough sergeant stepped before his platoon after a fouled-up drill. "When I was a little boy," he said in a gentle voice, "I had a set of wooden soldiers. But one day somebody stole them and I was heartbroken. My mother sought to comfort me, so she told me, 'Don't cry, son; you'll get them back some day.'"

He paused and looked the rookie over with icy eyes. Then he sternly ed: "Mother was right! By golly, I've got 'em!"

Of course, there will always be some "necessary" noise but the fact that on all sides, among all classes of people, knowledge of the ill effects of noise is becoming widespread should be of great benefit to us all.
