Downing Street, 19th January, 1867.

No. 3.

Sir,—

The negotiations respecting the proposed Confederation of the British North American Provinces have reached a point at which I think it right that you should be generally apprised of the mode in which that proposal is viewed by Her Majesty's Government. They are not unaware of the difficulties which must attend any attempt to consolidate in one body politic, a variety of Provinces whose habits, laws, and interests must be, in many respects, different, and in some perhaps not wholly compatible. By far the most important part of those difficulties has been removed in the present instance by the wise and loyal foresight of the public men of Lower Canada, who, in their treatment of this subject, have shown themselves able to reconcile a manly support of their hereditary customs and Institutions with a generous confidence in the justice and friendly feeling of their more numerous fellow subjects of British origin. The questions which remain in controversy will be approached by Her Majesty's Government with anxious and careful attention, but, I must add, in no spirit of indifference.

That in time of war or tumult the armed force of British North America should be one, under one Supreme Command. That in time of peace, their commerce, their post, their great lines of communication, and, with due regard to local usage, their civil and criminal jurisprudence, should be governed by the same rules; that an extended public opinion should be brought to bear on the settlement of narrow local controversies, and that the most important affairs of British North America should be administered by a combination of the ablest men whom it can furnish. These benefits appear to me so indisputable, so pervading, and so permanent in their character, that I should be wanting to my duty if I did not express to you, and through you to the community over which you preside, my earnest hope that no trifling obstacle will be allowed to interfere with their full attainment.

As my object is not to express any opinion on the details of this measure, but to give to the principle on which it is founded, that frank support which Her Majesty's Government consider to be due from them, I shall only add, that you are at full liberty to communicate this despatch to your Executive Council.

I have, &c., &c., &c.,

(Signed) CARNARVON.

Holloway's Ointment—Agonising Pains—It is gratifying to hear sufferers recount the ease they derived when first they applied this Ointment to their ulcers, sores or abscesses, with which they had been afflicted for years. Soon after its application to a bad leg or inflammatory ulcer, it restrains the excitement of blood vessels and nerves, which at once brings coolness and comfort, and further the gradual deposits of healthy materials to fill all the ravages caused by debility and disease. It expels all noxious matters, and heals all sores soundly. It gives ease to varicose veins, bad legs, and swelling of the joints when the agony is almost unremitting and the pain too much for a giant's strength.
