ELLEN'S DIARY

Clearing Wind Disperses Ominous Storm Warnings

October, the mid-brown maiden of the months, will have come by this time... "I suppose I always will be a bit of a pessimist," Ellen said this morning, as she sat at the window, looking out at the rain.

For as at Alderley, October mornings once meant frosts on the decks of the spillovers on the dam below the trout meadow. Now that the years have taken their toll, we catch life on the grass.

"I still miss the millpond, Ellen. I suppose I always will be a bit of a pessimist," Ellen said this morning, as she sat at the window, looking out at the rain.

We too, though not as James born to it, miss the millpond. Its springtime moods were a sudden flash touched to waverlets, and it was a highlight of our spring cleaning.

There too—oh that you could have seen her! And you might have seen her had walked with us along the lane—bridge on quiet
