A Wide Range.

A preparation which enriches and purifies the blood and assists nature in repairing wasted tissue must have a wide range of usefulness. Such a preparation is Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil with Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda. The uses of Scott's Emulsion are not confined to wasting diseases, like consumption, scrofula or anemia. They embrace nearly all those minor ailments associated with loss of flesh.

There are 24 boxes on the highest mountain planned by Mr. Christensen, 15 feet on the next highest and 10 on the lowest. The low mountain contains a number of small caves, to be used for restaurants, stores and stables, and the large one level with the base for a natatorium. A complete water supply system provides for the subterranean of the pockets on the mountain sides, in which trees are planted and furnishes natural springs, which unite in streams, flowing down into a lake at the base.

How to Give a Floral Party.
A "floral" party is unique and interesting. On your cards of invitation write the word floral in one corner. Decorate the rooms as prettily as possible and the tables also. Before announcing refreshments distribute cards among your guests upon which is written one line of a poem. Inform them that the line on each card matches a line on some other card and when joined will form complete but well-known poets, and are all about flowers. The holders must match cards and so find escorts to dinner.

There are many pretty couplets by Shakespeare, Longfellow, Felicia Hemans and others. After dinner, when in the parlors, arrange small tables as if for cards, with a supply of paper and pencils.

Announce that the game is to be a "floral tale," told by questions and answers, and a prize will be awarded to the person answering the most questions.

"Lily."
"What did she say about marrying?"
"Marigold."
"When her lover proposed to her on his knees what did she say to him?"
"Johnny-Jump-Up."
"When he went away what did she give him?"
"Bachelor buttons."
"Whom did she say she loved more?"
"Sweet William."
And so on through lots of questions and answers. The prize may be a lovely water color of flowers.—Chicago Chronicle.

The Wilmer of the Epitaph.
Bishop Wilmer of Alabama, is not in attendance upon the convention, but he is well represented by his anecdotes, which are related by churchmen such as Lincoln's stories are by the general public. Here is one of them: One of the Bishop's friends had a deeply beloved wife, and, in his sorrow, caused these words to be inscribed on her tombstone: "The light of mine eyes has gone out."
The bereaved man, within a year, was walking through the graveyard with another gentleman. When they arrived at the tomb the latter asked the Bishop what he would say of the present state of affairs, in view of the words on the tombstone. "I think," said the Bishop, "the words, 'The light of mine eyes has gone out,' should be added."—Minneapolis Journal.

Opinions on Trust.
"It is much harder to examine and judge than to take up money on trust, and, therefore, the far greater part of the world borrow from others than those who entertain concerning all the affairs of life and death. Hence it proceeds that men are so unanimously eager in the pursuit of things, which, far from having any inherent real good, are varnished over with specious and deceitful glories, and contain nothing answerable to their appearance. Hence it proceeds, on the other hand, that in the things which are called evil, there is nothing so hard and terrible as the general cry of the world threatens. Thus the multitude has ordained. But the greatest part of their ordinances are derogated by the wise."—Bolingbroke.

Telephone Kiosks.
The extension of the telephone booth idea is to be made in Copenhagen. A company of leading Danes has been forming with an adequate preliminary capital, to erect in all the public squares of the city, telephone kiosks, which will be capacious and elegantly fitted up. Here, besides the telephone, the person will have access to the daily papers, be able to write letters, receive messages, have their shoes polished and generally to make themselves comfortable.

HOLLOW MOUNTAINS.

A Chicago Engineer has a Brand-New Eighteen-Cent Idea.

Nothing ever aches a Chicago man. Hence, it need occasion no surprise to learn that an engineer of the Windy City has developed a scheme by which it is proposed to build giant mountains, or an entire range, at short notice. Charles C. Christensen is this engineer's name. The Chicago millionaire was crossed by the fact that last July, when he was spending the summer in Colorado, and he brought it home with him and made a blue print of it. Mr. Christensen being the most successful of the big manufacturers of mining machinery, a citizen of the United States and a member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, he is not to be classed among the wild-eyed visionaries who have been amusing the public so many years. He is an engineer of high reputation, has perfect confidence in his mountain scheme and is supplied with arguments and figures to prove that it is not only practicable, but offers the opportunity for the making of several fortunes. He contemplates a mountain provided with all modern conveniences, such as hotels, sanitariums, pavilions, clubs, stores, restaurants, ratoriums and stables, from which a constant revenue would be derived.

Mr. Christensen's mountains, as they are pictured in the blue print, are built of steel and are hollow. They are covered on the inside with steel plates, shaped and painted to imitate cave formations, and the lower part of the walls is clad with thin layers of real rock. There are clusters and lines of incandescent lamps arranged on the ceilings and walls to represent precious stones, and electric fountains, springs and waterfalls to make the caves complete.

The outside of the mountains are covered with steel plates, forming pockets of many different shapes and sizes, cemented and filled with soil, in which are growing pine and fir trees, mountain shrubbery and wild flowers. The exterior of these pockets, as well as the mountain sides, are clad with layers of hollow rocks of different shapes.

The general scheme of construction is very similar to that employed in sky scraper buildings, with the difference that Mr. Christensen has planned one mountain 1,000 feet high, and surmounted it with a tower 500 feet higher. Above the caves are the modern cliff dwellings, built like the Chicago high buildings and divided into suitable flats and furnished with all modern improvements. The upper stories form hotels and sanitariums, and each story will have, beside elevator connection with level ground, an exit to a burrow trail, which winds up and down the mountain.

There are 24 boxes on the highest mountain planned by Mr. Christensen, 15 feet on the next highest and 10 on the lowest. The low mountain contains a number of small caves, to be used for restaurants, stores and stables, and the large one level with the base for a natatorium. A complete water supply system provides for the subterranean of the pockets on the mountain sides, in which trees are planted and furnishes natural springs, which unite in streams, flowing down into a lake at the base.

VERY HELPFUL TO LADIES.

Quick Relief, With no After Unpleasantness. Com. s. to Those Who Use South American Kidney Cure.

Whilst both sexes are sufferers from kidney trouble, in many respects women are liable to peculiar weaknesses and pains, because of disorganization of the kidneys. Objection is taken, and rightly, to many remedies because of the method of use, as well as after-unpleasantness. This is never the case with the South American Kidney Cure. It gives ease to the sufferer in six hours, and no annoying effects follow, for in a short time, even in aggravated cases, an entire cure is effected. There is no other medicine like South American Kidney Cure. It is a remedy for the kidneys and bladder only—not a general specific that is supposed to cure everything that aches by effecting no cure. South American Kidney Cure does its particular work, and does it well. For sale at Dodd's Medical Hall.

It has wrought such a change in my condition that I feel like a new man." Sold by S. W. Dodd.

THE CELLARS OF WARSAW.

Walland Pillars Bank With the Exhalations of Centuries.

Ninety-nine out of a hundred fall to go to Warsaw, and the 100th probably misses the one sight which alone should suffice to attract every one to it. I only went there in 1884, and it is a most curious and interesting sight. The cellars in the town because my guide happened to be thirsty. I had been building him to take me to the famous field where the Kings of Poland used to elect; but, being a Jew, and not even a Polish Jew, he had no patriotism, natural or artificial, and preferred to draw up at an uninviting public house in the market place.

The prospect of a traveler's custom really induced me to visit his best-room, but I did not go down to the cellars. The stealthy procession by slimy stairs suggested associations of Guy Fawkes, or at least Silvio Pellico. We turned a corner, and stepped straight into the scenery of a fairy tale. Endless corridors disappeared into the darkness in every direction, at once ghost-like and bewitching. The low, red, glowing light, and pillars were dank with the exhalations of centuries. But how to convey an idea of the immensity of this catacomb labyrinth, of the primval fungus, which often blocked the entire entrance to a bin? It was a va-like substance, recalling dingy cotton wool, and varying in shade from light grey to nearly black, according to age. It hung upon the shelves in damp clouds, it enshrouded the bottles, it danced upon the corks. Slimy, repulsive lichen ornamented the masonry, some bright red and shaped like star fishes, others of stagnant green, suggesting monstrous toads and lizards which slunk away at the approach of light. As the eyes became accustomed to the gloom, they detected other and more horrible growths in the recesses of the bins.

We wandered over an hour and set left the greater part of this strange place unexplored. Mine host evidently knew the geography. Bin Holder, for he never hesitated an instant about our course. I took care to keep close to him, for I was constantly picturing to myself the horror of being shut up there all night—how the ghost of Tokay would emerge from some bin of the shadow of death; how the fungus growths would creep in the recesses and spring out upon the unwary to fold him in their fall embrace.

A similar haze hung along the top of the passages, and I tried to fancy it was flavored with the choicest and oldest vintages of Tokay, but could not get beyond a moldy taste akin to the fungus on the vine-rows of a supper party. My first surprise was to observe that the bottles were kept upright and with the cork loosely inserted, not hammered down and sealed. These are conditions for keeping Tokay in perfect condition, and there is the advantage that a sample, even of the oldest Tokay, may be taken out and tasted at any moment without injuring its contents. Moreover, a bottle may be shaken to any extent without risk. No one knows the peculiar virtues of Tokay. It has not been made for a generation—at least the modern wine which goes by the name comes from the vineyards of Tokay, and is not the Tokay of olden times. It is not the Tokay of olden times which goes by the name of Tokay. It is not the Tokay of olden times which goes by the name of Tokay. It is not the Tokay of olden times which goes by the name of Tokay.
